I would have pushed to have the cop charged with impersonating an amateur radio operator and for transmitting on the ham bands without a license

You are not in the best spot for the off shore MW. You need a specialized antenna like a Beverage or amplified loop.

They would not bother to do that. Just blowing your head off is good enough for them. We were being attacked by them long before Iraq and it took the twin tower for us to react. The world then heard from us and I hope we never stop until all the terrorists are dead wherever they hide.

I have aquired an FRG-100, and am curious as to wha the option TCXO-4 does, I know that it stabilizes the frequency, but what does that mean? And so you see a huge difference in the stock stabilizer?

Thank You

SUBJ: IPS DAILY SOLAR AND GEOPHYSICAL REPORT ISSUED AT 05/2330Z SEPTEMBER 2004 BY IPS RADIO AND SPACE SERVICES
FROM THE AUSTRALIAN SPACE FORECAST CENTRE
SUMMARY FOR 05 SEPTEMBER AND FORECAST FOR 06 SEPTEMBER - 08 SEPTEMBER
STATUS INDICATORS SOL:GREEN   MAG:GREEN     ION: GREEN
1A. SOLAR SUMMARY
Activity 05 Sep:  Very low

Flares: none.

Observed 10.7 cm flux/Equivalent Sunspot Number for 05 Sep: 103/52

1B. SOLAR FORECAST

| | 06 Sep | 07 Sep | 08 Sep |
|---|---|---|---|
| Activity | Low | Low | Low |
| Fadeouts | None expected | None expected | None expected |
| 10.7cm/SSN | 105/54 | 110/60 | 110/60 |

COMMENT: Some spot development between 04-20UT to north-east and south east of 667. Magnetic configuration of this region remains simple. Background xray flux only shows a small increase toward the end of UT day. This trend may continue if current spot development around 667 continues. 667 is currently quiet with no solar radio events observed on the Culgoora Radiospectrograph.
Solar wind speed was steady until around 17UT afterwhich jumping to 360 km/sec.
The north south component of the interplanetary magnetic field was southward 10nT 13-17UT. The origin of the small jump in the solar wind speed is unclear. US Space Environment Centre reported a filament eruption at N22W30 around 06UT. Subsequent viewing of LASCO C2 imagery (as C3 had stopped) showed a north-west directed bubble. The lack of subsequent images hampered decision on geoeffectiveness. But available imagery suggests that the CME bubble did not expand greatly and appeared directed mostly away from the Earth. This estimate may be revised as more images become available, as these would show any further expansion of the CME. Also, speculatively, recent far-sided halo mass ejections suggest that a possible active region may rotate onto the solar disk in 5-7 days time.

Radio Damascus in English on 13610 @ 21:12 UTC.  There is QRN and I need to listen in LSB due to intermod from EWNT up on 13615, but it is making it over much better then it usually does at this time.  I can actually listen to it.

Currently news in English.

the problem is many statins don't even give a real station i.d. at all.

The Canadian stations are notorious for this

I kind of agrtee with DX Ac on this one.  listening for only two inutes dosn't always give you a correcr i.d  even if you actually heard a i.d.

such as a statin being relayed.   as a made-up example HCJB Quito, Ecuador being relayed over WCRB Okechobee Florida or WMLD Maryland.

and to make matters even more confusion, one of my local tv stations constajntly I.D.'ed in a way that made them look like they were actually the other tv station in town!!!!

they did own both tv stations in town. WOIO 19 and WUAB 43.  showing different programming. 19 is CBS. 43 is UPN.

43 identified with "WOIO-TV 19 Shaker Heights-Cleveland" in big printed letters taking up almost the whole screen followed by "WUAB-TV 43 Lorain-Cleveland" in really tiny print so tiny that you couldn't really see it on a 20 inch tv unless you were right up at the screen, and even then, you really needed a magnifying glass.

Is that way of giving "station identification" legal?

IF he's listing his "Assumptions" on what he heard, then he might not have heard those stations.

sometimes there's more than one station on the same frequency where you can only hear the one one day and only hear the other another day.

true example from my loggings (althogh this veers off of shortwave a bit)

one day, on 162.400 MHZ, I hear only NOAA weather radio. I think from Castilla, Ohio (spelling?).   On another day on the same radio and same frequency, 162.400 MHZ, I hear only "Enviroment Canada"'s weather radio.

Some days, I can hear both depending on which direction I turn te radio.

On a normal day, I can't hear anything on 162.400 MHZ

My local NOAA weather radio station is on 162.55 MHZ which I can hear all of the time.

TELAMON,

Here it is Labor Day 2004 and John 'ff' Kerry has Flip-Floped again.
John 'ff' Kerry aka: The King of Flip-Flop

Now John 'ff' Kerry is calling our efforts to "Librate" Iraq.
( The Liberal Democrats call it 'occupy'. )
- The Wrong War
- In the Wrong Place
Looks like for John 'ff' Kerry we are back in the 1970s again.

Does anyone else ever wonder where someone is physically after reading some type of reception post? Sometimes I read that Bill or Joe has received a station clearly but when I attempt I get alot of nothing. I am always wondering where Bill and Joe are located and what that has to do with the reception and my lack of.

Thanks

You really don't need this unless you are receiving digital modes. And at that, unless the room you are in drastically changes temperature or the 12v supply changes voltage, you don't need the stability. However, there are some people who feel better having it.

Tell that to the IRA. You remember Ireland, right? Where so many Christians have blown up so many Christians? So...not all terrorists are Muslims, and not all Muslims are terrorists. All trees are plants, but not all plants are trees. Get it?

False premise. Muslims -do- condemn the terrorists. Maybe not as vocally as you might like, and maybe it's not reported as it should be. Since your premise is wrong, your conclusion is wrong.

I don't hear a lot of Christians jumping up and down whenever one of -their- fundamentalists whacks an abortion doctor. Eric Rudolph hid in our own backyard for five years, getting help the whole time from the local Christians. He blew up an abortion clinic, a gay bar, and a bunch of absolutely innocent people at the Summer Olympic games in Atlanta. I didn't hear many outraged Christians then. No, they just helped keep a guy responsible for several deaths out of the reach of law enforcement for half a decade, incidentally putting you and yours (and me and mine) at risk. How much outrage did -you- express then? Or were you one of those knee-jerk reactionaries that wanted to lynch Richard Jewell for the Olympic bombing? Trial? Who needs one? It's obvious who's guilty! I wonder. I won't even go into all of the Iraqi's that are risking their lives (and getting killed for their efforts) working alongside of us to rebuild and police their country. Unless, of course, they're all terrorists waiting for their moment. But wait...those Iraqi cops that are getting popped daily are being killed by terrorists and their supporters, aren't they?

Hmmm.

I typed in "Muslims condemn" at google, http://www.google.com/search?sourceid=navclient&ie=UTF-8&q=Muslims+condemn and the -very first hit- lists more Muslim condemnations than you could shake a stick at. There's over 150 links at that page alone, including Muslims that are serving in the US armed forces.  That google link will even hook you up with Aljazeera, and an article called "US Muslims condemn brutality and bigotry".

Let me quote:

"In mid-May, the Council on American Islamic Relations (CAIR) launched an online petition drive against what it called Not in the Name of Islam.

The effort was an attempt to give US Muslims an opportunity to publicly denounce "the violent acts of a few Muslims" such as the beheading of Nicholas Berg in Iraq.

"No injustice done to Muslims can ever justify the massacre of innocent people, and no act of terror will ever serve the cause of Islam," the petition states. "We repudiate and dissociate ourselves from any Muslim group or individual who commits such brutal and un-Islamic acts."

More than 640,000 individuals and members of signatory organisations have signed the petition so far, according to CAIR's website."

<end quote>

There's much, much more there, and it's worth the read.

As for overseas Muslims, I think we ought to cut them a -wee- bit of slack. I think it's more than likely that those Muslims fear reprisals for openly condemning the fundamentalists amongst them, just as people living in 1940 Germany feared speaking out against National Socialism. That doesn't mean that there aren't Muslims that are helping us. It was an Iraqi that led us to Jessica Lynch, and and Iraqi doctors and nurses that gave her the best care that they could...even after the Iraqi army had fled the hospital, leaving her behind. I have no doubt that they were Muslims, although I of course can't say for sure.

Let's kill them and their families, too. Just to be sure.

No, on second thought, they must be Christians. Muslims, of course, are incapable of anything but the most beastial cruelty.

As for the dancing Muslims, I too always find myself wishing that I was over with a few hand grenades and a Kalishnikov. But then, it's not against the law to hate Americans. People right here in our own streets have the absolute right to do the same sort of dancing. And as much as I might hate them for it, and want to hurt them over it, that's the way it ought to be. That's what freedom is...you remember freedom? That concept that we're trying to spread around over there? And for every Muslim dancing in the street, I strongly suspect that there are many more hiding at home shaking their heads...or crying with us.

If you think that we've been catching those people on the playing cards because our soldiers recognized them, or because they showed valid ID when they were asked, think again. We're getting help fingering these people. We tried to bomb Saddam at a safe house. Where did we get that information? It wasn't all from monitering cell phone useage. And what about Odai and Qusai Hussein? We were able to kill them because an Iraqi, probably a Muslim, tipped us off.

But the more I think of it, you're right. Not enough of those slanty eyed Japs spoke up during the war, so we should have nuked the whole set of islands. Hey, if they're not courageous enough to face the wrath of their peers and their government, to Hell with them. Except the geisha girls. I could use few of them. And there's even Biblical precedent for that, so I want my share.

> Only now are the Muslims in the Middle East beginning to realize that > they are all viewed as terrorists,

Yep. That's the why the world is calling for genocide. Oh, wait...they aren't, are they? We aren't, are we? We want the -truly- guilty, because we're a nation of law.

> and it's too late for them to do > anything about it any more.  Russia is now thinking about nuking a few > terrorist enclaves to demonstrate some REAL terror to the bastards.

That's absolute and utter bullshit. No one is about to nuke anybody, regardless of how much they deserve it.

Let me qualify that. If there's any nuking going on, it'll be directed at us by the terrorists, not the other way around. Which is why getting rid of Saddam was a good thing. But we don't need to pave the Middle East to do it. We'll kill them one by one. (Or ten by ten, etc.) That's the American way. Not carpet bombing or nuking the entire region. Your "death to them all" crack is more in line with fundamentalist thinking than anything. It's unreasonable, it's impractical, it's injust and it's un-American. That's not the way we do things. Yes, it's a fight to the death, and yes we need to go -wherever- they are to kill them. But scorched earth isn't the answer.

> Good.  They brought it on themselves when they started purposely > killing school children.  Death to them all.

They did all die. Which is a shame, really. Now the Russians can hunt down their accomplices. That's the way civilized nations handle things. And it's pretty much an open secret that while Palestinians have been blowing up Israeli school children off and on for years, it's the US that stays Israel's hand in the reprisal department.

Have you ever bitched about -that-?

No, just kill them all and let God sort them out. By the way: it was a genocidal Christian that coined that phrase.

Especially MW. I've been lucky, though, in trying to listen to Webcasts to verify who I'm hearing on my radio.
They're frustrating, though...even when they do ID, they don't necessarily use call letters. Just saying "CBC" doesn't tell me where they're transmitting from, which is what interests me the most.

about 20 years ago, there used to be a longwave radio station in Cleveland, Ohio (beacon) that also had weather announcements in regular AM voice.

I forget the frequency. I think it was somewhere between 300 and 400 khz (maybe 344 khz?)

well, whatever frequency it was or is, is this station still on the air, and if so, does it still transmit weather announcements in regular AM voice?

Now, I have to get back to Lake Erie. ;)

Digital readout is not all it's cracked up to be, especially in low end radios (which does include all the models listed). It causes birdies and other digital hash that disrupts reception of otherwise copyable signals.

For real DX work, I'll take an analog tuner any time.

Received Monaco Maritime Radio via grey line, in Auckland, New Zealand.
Yesterday, Sep. 6, at 06:00 UTC, with an announcement preceded by chimes:

"This is Monaco Radio, Three-Alpha-Charlie" repeated for about three minutes.

Couldn't hear their weather broadcast to the Atlantic, which is usually around 09:33 UTC. Propagation had disappeared by then.

I'm stupid. Tell me how this ties in to Iraq and Hussein, who El Quaida and Ossama bin Laden hated. Bin Laden even had a couple of contracts put on Hussein because he was running a secular state.

There is NO connection between New York and Iraq. Bush has even said they had no evidence. It was all done under false pretenses and you know it.

A crystal is used to set the frequency in the radio. Crystals will change frequency a bit with changing temperatures This is called 'drift'.

To prevent this, a really accurate crystal will be held at an even temperature by some sort of heating device. The temperature of this has to be above any normally encountered room temperature...for obvious reasons.

It's easier to vary the heat to the crystal than to adjust the frequency by other means. It may be a nice thing to have, but most likely unnecessary. It may be good if you were taping all night and didn't want the station maybe slowly fading out due to frequency shift.

The worst radio I've ever seen for this was a cheap 35 dollar Grundig(1) multiband. It would change 10 kilohertz in under three hours. A related problem is it's inability to keep time. Garbage.

I'm getting it here in Seattle, too. 0310 UTC. Not very clear, but definitely there.

Thanks for the logs! Those are enviable... we who live in the north-central US (Minnesota) do not usually receive the nice Trans-Pacific MW or even SW stuff that you folks do in the Pacific Northwest. However, I have been focusing on MW this past weekend, and I have noticed a big jump in catchable signals here in MN. I've logged quite a few stations that weren't coming in to my location at all even last week. I am usually sleeping during the wee hours, when the pursuit of MW DX is most fruitful, but even at 10:00 pm CDT, I was getting stations from 2,000 miles hence.

Have fun!

Jackie

No thanks. I'm already participating in two other scams where I gave all my banking info to a Nigerian and a nice gentelman from Hong Kong.
Soon millions of dollars will roll into my accounts and I will have enough trouble spending all that money.

I just found this. It may well be old news to everyone else, though...

Program updated July 2004. Needs XCLASS installed before compilation. Nice new scan feature and has the ability to read Clifton Turner's database format.

There are quite a few inexpensive electronic gems out there, innate! Especially in the used marts; although yer gratuitous grumpiness would probably doubt their existence! That sweetly singin' Rotel RX-602, here in the computer room, wuz a mere $14 fer 35 watts-per-channel of direct-coupled harmonic heaven & killer f.m. section! Me beloved Marantz MR-235, with 35 w.p.c. of valvesque lateral-mosfet direct-coupled  mini-Marshall vibe, wuz all of $28! Cap-n-resistor mods added another $20 to da tab! ... As previously stated, johannjumpup, unless yer QTH suffers from temperature extremes, ya won't need that TCXO-4 frequency stablizer. Get thyself that f.m. module instead, & pray for good propogation on 29.5 mhz! Your Century Frog was based on the receiver section of Yaesu's FT-890 transceiver, & seems bereft of the problems plaguing aging FRG-7000s, FRG-7700s, & FRG-8800s! All the best from Sactown for good dx!!!

Not bloody likely. They're sending ME the money. I've already sent the funds they need to look after the corrupt bank officials. It's been a few months now but these things take time.

One of the problems you may encounter from copying more than one list at a time so you don't get caught at it is getting "your log" out of order.

Either that or you are a time traveler. If that is the case then give Art Bell a call you poser.

Well, in that case I'm printing my own money. I'll be on a three dollar bill and Hillary, Bill and Kerry will be on the other denominations.
Then I'll finally be part of the elite in this country.

I think Steve posted this the other week but I did not pay attention and was looking for New Zealand on 15720 this afternoon my time on the west coast. Needless to say I could not find them right away until I stumbled on 17675.

This frequency is working as well for me as the 15720 was and I wonder how it is working for other people.

I had a nice afternoon in the park on the hillside behind Ventura overlooking the ocean. Took the 7600G along and threw the roll up wire antenna over a tree branch next to the picnic table. Tuned in a number of international broadcasts on it. Brought some food and a book on antennas and had a nice time. Sure can't beat the view.

Oh yeah see:

Hi Jackie,

I noticed the Boulder mid-latitude "K" Index had been low for a few days straight. When coupled with relatively low solar flux numbers, this very often indicates good mediumwave and lower shortwave conditions.

I suppose if I had tuned some of the domestic 10 kHz channels I might have heard a number of Alaskan stations, which are moderately difficult from Washington State (along with Hawaii). But with the foreign stations coming in, it was an easy decision to try for the "splits".

These stations I logged from Japan and Korea on mediumwave are common catches during my DXpedition trips to the WA coast (usually to the small community of Grayland), but this is the first time I've had much success inland and near my mediumwave locals. It takes really good receivers and antennas to pull in the (usually) weaker trans-Pacific MW DX amongst the powerful stateside signals.

It can be tough to roll out of bed early enough to catch the DX, though!

Good Listening,

Guy

Not only was VHF and shortwave better than usual, so was mediumwave. See my posting titled "Trans-Pacific MW and Tropical Band Loggings". Sunday morning, Sept. 6th was excellent, with Japanese and Korean MW signals making it to the Seattle-Tacoma area where I live.

Does anyone have a copy of a Sony 2010 owner's manual? A pdf copy on a disk would be ok. If so, please email me as I would like to purchase one if it's not too expensive. Thanks

What receiver are you using, single or double conversion?  It could be an image.  At 4810 (900 below) I'm getting a time-signal type beeping sound. It is very strong and can be heard at 4790 khz as a "whoosh, whoosh" sound, and apparent image is on 5700 khz (455*2 above 4790) when using a single conversion receiver as a regular tick sound.  I posted about this station before, and it was suggested as a possible idling utility station by DxAce.

Listen to the clips here: http://dspace.dial.pipex.com/brogers/page3.html and see if you find anything like it.

Congratulations and well done on some superb logs as usual, especially from suburban Puyallup.

RRI Serui is interesting. I see that it is now moved from 4606.6 to 4605! - I think reception in U.S. is favoured by the fact that the Serui TX has the large mass of Irian Jaya mainland behind it and the high mountains. In my empirical experience this would favour transmission to your QTH as some of the transmitted signal would bounce off the mountains in your direction. Received here in Montagu at 2100 utc, bang on local Serui sunrise. Very faint though and confirms it's 500 watt power. Only managed a very faint RRI "Radio Republika Indonesia" ID. Signal was barely readable and only came in for about ten minutes.

OTOH I received RRI Fak Fak also at 2100 utc booming in quite clear with excellent ID's on 4790 Khz. According to my theory Fak Fak is located on a large bay with its outlook pointing directly to South Africa and mountains behind the TX favouring reception in my area. This is also confirmed by the fact that the signal is so strong here that it gives the impression that the TX power is much more than the listed 1 Kw, but bear in mind that it is not received in the U.S. at all.

Both Serui and Fak Fak were received at 2100 utc on 040906
They are both equidistant from Puyallup and Montagu - some 7,500 miles.

I buy Shortwave Magazine each month (I live in Ireland, so the content is pretty relevant). As you might guess, it is very UK-oriented (eg. reception logs) but it does have good general articles, too. It has regulars like what's happening on SW in the different continents, both about radio and TV (under the columns 'Bandscan <region>' and regularly features transmitters of interest in the UK and occasionally Ireland. There are also other articles each month of interest to the radio amateur reader. While it's called 'SWM', it does cover more than the 0-30MHz spectrum, for example, it also has articles relating to the air band.

I buy my copy from a newsagents (it sells for �5.80 = US$6.90 at the moment, rate of sterling dependent), their subscription rates seem to be pretty reasonable as far as magazines go, probably because it's not bulky like a computing magazine.  I don't know how much it retails for in the US (and have never seen Monitoring Times for sale here) so I'm unable to compare the two.  Not sure if the magazine is as relevant in the US (wrt some of its articles) but I'd certainly recommend buying a copy to see for yourself - if you can find it on sale somewhere!

That's not a good frequency change for the US east coast. The 16-m band doesn't hold up much after sunset with the days getting shorter and the solar flux continuing to drop. I suppose they made this change for the coming summer season in their area.

You haven't proven anything about Kerry either, just talk and speculation. The majority will decide who the next president will be, regardless of what you believe.

Thanks for the info, I'll try to find a copy.
By the way, I'm in Canada not the US. Just across the pond

Winter propagation has it's advantages but the downside is losing the higher bands (above 15-mhz) after sunset in the winter, especially with the declining solar flux.

Try to get it through your head that we were attacked by a relatively small minority of Islamic fanatics. The moderate majority of Muslims must be encouraged to take on the fanatics within their religion if this kind of terrorism is to be defeated. The west can not do it alone. It must be done within the Muslim community.

Why would you say Fak Fak is not received in the U.S. at all? It is reported here from time to time.

I don't think the mountains have a lot to do with it.

Oh really? Well, let's start with being in Cambodia, Christmas 1968... Yeah, yeah, and Nixon was President... yeah... that memory is seared -- seared, into my memory....

How is that just for starters?

Kerry is a fraud, a fabricator, and a liar.

In my empirical experience this would favour transmission to your QTH as some of the transmitted signal would bounce off the mountains in your direction. Received here in Montagu at 2100 utc, bang on local Serui sunrise. Very faint though and confirms it's 500 watt power. Only managed a very faint RRI "Radio Republika Indonesia" ID. French programming Monday afternoon, heard on my car radio from Fifth Avenue all the way to the Nassau County line.
STEREO!
Must be running kW or more. Possibly a second station under it.

I assume French is Haitian; channel was previously Spanish religion.

Any idea of location?

Fak Fak signal still holding up well here, SCI (Song of the Cocoanut Isles) at 1200, mentions of Indonesia, then into presumed news, and the ocean radar (swisher), has faded a bit. Like a lot of stations, the voice modulation seems a bit low, but the music comes through quite well.

One of the better Indo's on the band this morning.

Hi,

   How old is your 2010 because I think there might have been a later version using the same model number?

   Cheers - Joe

The Palstar R30 is one heck of a good receiver. If you can live without bells and whistles, and want a solid radio that can handle big antennas without overload, this one is for you.

I don't think the collins filters are much better than the Murata.

I love my R30 and have run it with 700 ft of wire for an antenna ... no BCB overload.

Highly recommended.

If you're familiar with the schedule and the announcers/programs, you can go that fast.  I can hear the Canadian accent on RCI in an instant, Radio Netherlands broadcasts in English have a certain vocabulary that is unique, BBC news has a very exact style and locution, etc.  Others here can identify the exact transmitter being used by the hum.  Now, I can only do this for a few big powerhouse Euro/NA broadcasters - doing this for a wide range of African/Arabic/South American/etc. broadcasters is way beyond my skill.

Tim.

Fred,

The 2010 part of MARE is down at the moment. If you email me your postal address, I'll stick the 2001D (same radio) owner's manual in the post to you. There is no catch, I simply don't have the radio anymore.

FEC-TOR is pretty trivial to encode, it's just the 5 bit teletype code, with the start and stop bits stripped and some parity bits added, and the three character block sent twice with some bits inverted.

Remember, this stuff was designed in the late '60s-early '70s to retrofit onto existing RTTY gear, before the days of microcomputers.  Back when the hardware for a one byte register would cost $20 or so.

But it's all uppercase, so I doubt that any newswire would be interested anymore.

Just be aware that, if you want to get serious, you will have to get a fairly high performance receiver, (on the par with an Icom R-75 or the like).  The maritime TOR stuff is narrowband shift (170? Hz) and the channels are closely spaced (1/2 kHz).

I use(d) an Kenwood R-1000, which is designed mostly for audio broadcast, and found that the 2.1 kHz narrow bandwidth (SSB) filter was often a bit too wide and that the tuning drifted just a bit too much (maybe 50 Hz) so that you had to babysit it to get solid copy.

AP has been publishing a bunch of stories like this all week.  My guess is the management took a couple of days off, and the kids are playing.
Hopefully, the kids will be rewarded with a pink slip when the manager(s) returns.

Now you're back peddling.
You know what that means, right?
In case you don't, it means this: It's what a spineless coward does when he errs in his speaking, and then rather than apoligizing and moving on like a grown up he waffles and lies and figets with himself. It's quite embarrassing really.

I think WYFR was still off as late as 2335 UT Sept 6, according to Glenn Hauser.

This is a great receiver, very sensitive, but had a few problems.  I sold mine a couple of years ago, it worked flawlessly, but the tuning knob is very cheap, lightweight and wobbled.  The clear LCD covering seemed to be as thin as plastic wrap, so I felt that it might eventually break, and it does not have a lot of bells and whistles that similarly priced sets have.  But it seemed to pull in a lot of stations, and the audio was great.

I like listening to NPR at times, but believe me, I have to have the heavy duty
'BS' filter in line.

It is readily apparent whose side they are on in this election.

Upon further analysis, it appears that this station is relaying another China program and is being used as a jammer. This would explain the overmodulated audio being broadcast over another Mandarin-language station, though it could also be a legitimate broadcast of their home service. Not Nei Menguu has I had originally suspected, since no ID was heard to back that up.

The ILG database (public version) had a couple of listings for Chinese jammers on that frequency.

The Chinese have certainly ramped up their transmitter capacity in the last few years, many of them dedicated solely to jamming purposes.

Much as the Russians did in years past.

We have to try to work this out together and stop working against it. The UN is more like a happy dream that practical reality.  Just ask a soldier or two who were ordered by the UN to stand by as children were massacred in Rwanda.  But not everything we do internationally as a global community is a failure.  The WTO is on the right track when it tells countries to eliminate protectionist tariffs and penalty duties.  NAFTA is on the right track, so is levelling of trade barriers in Europe, but they are only starts.  Everyone must play by the same rules and principles like environmental sustainability, basic human rights have to be enforced b/c profit oriented business won't pay attention to these things. We have to stop the bullying.  Can we make a reality?  I think we have to.  12 billion of us predicted this century?  Most of the growth in the third world? It's only going to get worse if we don't.  I think of the people outside the Roman empire who adopted Roman farming methods and had a population explosion.  They wanted what the Romans had and then swamped the empire into the dark ages.  We have to avoid repeating any sort of parallel.  I think it'll come more from within the society via more terror than without from conventional war. But perhaps a terrible mixture.

I've picked up Mexico on MW from Canada. Gotta be patient and keep the dial twirling.  Lots of bad signals will fade into audible ones.

Steve, I congratulate you on getting RRI Fak Fak - I'm sure it doesn't come in everyday in Holland Michigan.
Okay, I have not seen Fak Fak logged recently in the U.S. but have seen several logs for RRI Serui, hence my comment.
Also, Guy Atkins in Puyallup, an extremely experienced DXer did not log Fak Fak alongside his Serui log, although he was sure to have tried for it.

You have mentioned before:
> > > I don't think the mountains have a lot to do with it.

but I beg to differ with your opinion. Here in Montagu, my QTH is surrounded by high mountains and long distance DX comes in very rarely compared with say a coastal site or a location on a flat plain. I'm not saying it NEVER comes in, because, of course, my logs show that it does, but that is occasionally. OTOH if I go on a DXpedition to the coast, then the very long distance DX come's in everyday very easily.

It has also been written about in professional radio books and by experienced DXers that long distance DX is very "low angle", which confirms my own experience that high hills and/or mountains blocks out some of the exotic long distance DX signals.

I have been on very many DXpeditions to a wide variety of locations and have formed the opinion that better DX results are obtained if you are in a "bowl" with its opening out towards the path of the TX site you are trying for. This is even more enhanced at the coast if you are in a bay backed by hills or mountains, and the mouth of the bay opens out towards your intended target area. Magical results can be obtained under those circumstances.

Lastly, I receive more far distant DX from areas that have an open path to my QTH, whereas getting Peru from over the Andes is a very rare occurrence. Hence my opinion that mountains block long distance low angle DX signals.

At the campaign - Bush said we liberated 50 million people.  They say there are 20000 terrorists.  Do the math RHF stupid.   They're millions of people like you and me with a few thousand bad guys.  You just can't handle that they're smarter than you.

Yes, so how can you say you would believe them when they say smoking would be healthy as you did above?

Forget it, I don't even want to know.

This is a pathetic attempt to avoid the real issue and turn the argument another way to avoid the statement they were unable to dispute.

Saying microwaves magically start at 1000 Mhz, and saying 999 Mhz is not, and 800
Mhz is not, is bullshit talk.

Regardless of where you want to call it, the FACT remains that Microwave Ovens were manufactured that cooked your food with frequencies in the 800 Mhz region.

So, since we can cook food and heat at 800 Mhz, and since cell phones are using the same frequency range, we can make a definite connection here.

Any attempt to shift the discussion to one about where we now want to classify the word "microwaves" to be appropriate is just childish and ignorant, and nothing more than diversion from the point about cell phones being dangerous.

LEGAL exposure to certain RF in Russia can be different than the LEGAL limits in the US.   As if RF follows any of these laws, or as if a cell phone is not going to harm you just because you change the definition of what can be legally called microwaves.

What was considered low blood pressure a decade ago, is now being called high blood pressure in an attempt to sell more medication and make more money.    Just the AMA changing the imaginary boundary line did not make us all suddenly have high blood pressure, just as your changing what is now considered microwaves has no effect on this issue either.

If there is nothing that offends you in your community, then you ALSO know you're not living in a dictatorship either.

This is a stupid play on words that is meaningless!

You can NEVER have any society in which nothing offends anyone!    Not under ANY government.

Idiots.

You know, during the fall and winter months I carry mine in a backpack wrapped in bubble wrap along with batteries, headphones, wire, an antenna phaser, etc and find that the R30 is quite rugged. It gets hauled around on my back while I mountain bike or hike to secluded DX sites, tugged in and out of the pack ... no problem. I run it off some old rechargable cell phone batteries.

I thought about adding more weight to the tuning knob (solder or lead), but then that's just more mass to haul on my back.

I'll be getting the Palstar MW??? preselector soon (second hand) and will report on it's performance with the R30.

Best DX so far is WDHP, 1620khz US Virgin Islands while using a 700 ft wire on the ground. Sigs were S9 well over the usual US jumble, and I had no overload problems from a local station on 1290khz that was a mere 3 miles away.

Gee, am starting to get pumped for the fall DX season!

There are people using cell phones now that have been using them for more than 20 years in Japan. How long do you think it will take for the epidemic to show up?

No shit.    And if you have too many spots, all you have to do is double the price.
Half of the advertisers will drop, the other half will pay their share, and you just cut half of the spots from your station.     So simple, yet many are too afraid to turn down any advertiser to do it.    We did it and it works just fine.     Better to turn away advertisers than listeners!     If you have listeners, you will always have advertisers,  but you don't get listeners from having more advertisers, you get LESS listeners.

> Now that I am a listener, I am one of the first to turn away from a station > that plays too many spots, especially if the spots are totally uncreative, > boring and repetitive.

This is the problem with those in radio management, they never just ask themselves what THEY would listen to.     All you had to do is ask the DJs what they thought, as they are the ones that listen to the station longer than anyone.     If they get sick of a song or spot, it means time to drop it!

> Sometimes stations play the same spot twice during a > single set! How effective can that be to that customer?

I never understood that.     If I was the advertiser, I would much rather have had the extra spot play in another hour or on another station than waste two in the same break.     Besides, it pisses listeners off, and doing that means people will remember to NOT buy your product, just as they never buy from companies that send spam or telemarket.

> Radio has become ridiculously redundant.

Haven't been able to listen to it in many years.

Wow, someone else finally figured this out. Good for you. People I would explain this simple logic to, would be too afraid to try it because they never want to lose any advertiser and would rather have lots of advertisers and spots and low pay, than a few advertisers paying a lot more.

Problem is, if you are programming shit, you can only charge $5 a spot.

FIRST you get good programming. THEN you have a small sales staff of 3 or 4 people to handle incoming calls from Budweiser, McDonalds, etc. If you have to go out and get advertisers, then your programming sucks.

Kitty Kelley's got nothing on this guy. I'd like to know when Graham found this out. If it is true why did he wait till now to tell it. I guess it is more important for him to make money off national security with his book deal. What a sleaze bag.

Triple conversion Ten Tec 320, so it's most likely not an image. The sound at 4790 is about half the speed and evenly spaced (like the'Pip' sound from that web page.

. The sound at 5700 seems to go for about 12 or 13 bursts, then a single different sound. It then repeats.

http://www.wunclub.com/sounds/index.html

It sounds like a frog on amphetamines(1) croaking very quickly, then spitting out the bug and repeating the sequence.

(1) found mainly in the Pond behind dxAce's shack

This guy just flip floped again on Iraq and now he is against it. He is on both sides of all issues so he can't be wrong. He can't ever be right either for that reason.

A union just gave him a shotgun as a gift that he has been trying to ban for instance. He wants to pass anti-gun legislation but calls himself a hunter. He is Bryant on steroids.

Hi Guy,
    You raise two points of interest.
One is that it is a fairly regular feature of S. African DXing for us to get
N. American MW stations, but it seems very difficult indeed for U.S. MW DXer's to get the 100 Kw powerhouse omnidirectional TX's that we have here in S. Africa in the U.S.A. Even Mark Connelly on the East coast and a Canadian DXer up in Nova Scotia seem to have great difficulty.

The Canadian fellow achieved what for me must be the ultimate DX catch in Nova Scotia -> he claims to have got our 100 Kw R. 702. Now this TX has a very effective antenna system beamed only to the South West, so the signal to him could only have been long path - an astounding 17,000 miles away. If you go just North of the 702 TX you will get BBC on 702 from Europe. Since this path lies near Grayland, you might like to try for that when conditions are next good???

Also, I have a good friend in France who DX's NDB beacons on LW and he has also commented that European DXer's seem to get more N. American catches than Americans getting Europe. Go figure.......

Second, your experience is that your best most exotic DX is caught in mid winter. My experience down here is that the equinox - around 21st March and 21st September have given me markedly better results than any other time. That applies both to my home QTH and various DXpeditions.

There are some other anomalies too - Although getting U.S. East coast and Brazil here are fairly common, getting Mexico and Central America is so rare as to be an occasion to break out a bottle of champagne if you ever get one..... Also, even though Brazilian catches are common here, right down to the very South of the country, Argentina, right next door, hardly ever comes in. I really have no logical explanation for this.

best of 73's

Pantywaist? PC? Wow...those are ones I've never been called before. I'm PC because I don't agree with your genocidal views? Well then...so be it. It beats the hell out of being what -you- are. And again, not all international terrorists are Muslims. I pretty much beat the hell out of that one in my response to another one of your posts.

You don't know that. And even if it were true that the -majority- of them support it, does that justify killing them -all- as you so eloquently advocated doing? Again, kill 'em all and let God sort 'em out. Even the kids. Unless you want to run the adoption service?

> To sympathize with or > to support terrorists is to participate in terrorism.

I won't argue that one. So we put a bullet in their heads as well.
We -don't- turn the region into one big sheet of radioactive glass. That's what the terrorists would do.

That's crap. It's a demonstrable fact that any number of German citizens weren't entirely aware of what was-really- going on, and by the time they -were- aware of it it was too late to do much about it. Oh, except for the one's that helped hide Jews, tried to kill Hitler, helped Allied airmen back across the lines, etc. You say it's the same. That means that you think we should have killed them all as well. So why did you snip out my comment about killing all of those dirty little Japs, huh? There's no difference there, either. Odd...when I make a point you snip it. When you make the same point, you consider it a valid one.

Read again what I wrote, which you snipped and ignored, and you'll see why you're wrong. By the way, Leroy...snipping without noting the fact is bad form on Usenet. And it really makes you look like you can't address the points that you snipped away. If you'd like, I can give you a URL (or twenty) that deal with what we call "netiquette". You'd find it useful; it helps you play better with others.

Which includes Sinn Fein, as I pointed out in that other post to which I alluded earlier. And since it includes the IRA, then it includes international terrorists. And Christians. Unless you don't think Catholics are Christians, which wouldn't really surprise me. Even though you (stupidly, I must say) quote one as a sig file.

Actually, I support the war in Iraq, simply because they weren't complying with the terms of surrender from the first Gulf War. And I've been complaining at the top of my voice to anyone within earshot for -years- that we're too soft on terrorists. I'd have supported attacks on Libya, for example, for not handing over the terrorists that blew up the airliner over Lockerbie. We had the JFK sitting right off-shore, IIRC. A tomahawk a day might have done the trick.

Your mischaracterization of me as some kind of liberal wuss is WAY off the mark. That was my favorite thing about Reagan...mess with the bull and you got the horns. See? WAY off.

By the way...name calling, or ad hominem, is bad form.  Some people even consider the fight to be won when the other side resorts to mere name-calling, like some over-grown adolescent. If you like, I can give you a URL that explains the phrase "ad hominem". And since you started it, I'll feel free to respond in kind when I feel the urge. :)

> If terrorists could get their hands on nuclear weapons, they'd use > them against us in a heartbeat.

I think I implied that in my post. You know...the one that you snipped all to hell. The one that made your position look even more idiotic than you were able to do yourself.

> We HAVE nuclear weapons, and I say > that we use them on the Muslim terrorists first.

No, that's NOT what you said. You said death to them all, and you clearly meant all Muslims. So...whacked anyone in your neighborhood lately? By the way...someone asked you for some evidence to support your claim that Russia was considering the use of nukes. The crickets are getting kind of loud in here.

The thing that really gets me is this: you're all torn up over the Russian school children, as is everyone of my acquaintance that I've spoken of it with, and myself as well. Your solution? "Kill all the Muslims". This, of course, means the -children- of the Muslims as well. After all, as we used to say regarding the Indians, nits make lice. That means that the little ones grow up to be big ones. (There...I brought up Indians. But I'm still not PC, because I don't call them Native Americans. I hope you're not too disappointed, Leroy.) And how shall we kill these children? Nukes from a distance? Or can we line them up, and put bullets in their heads? Will you fire the first shot? The third? The 10,000th? I'll bet not. I hope not. And just because I -know- that you're not getting the subtle point that I'm trying to make here, I'll spell it out for you. Advocating the killing of them all makes you exactly the same as the terrorists that killed those kids. I'll bet my left nut that you lie in bed at night thinking what a great American patriot you are, and what a soft liberal commie Muslim-loving bastard Honus is. (Get it? -Lie- in bed.) Hear this: you are EXACTLY the same as those terrorists that took over the school. You flat out advocated killing countless thousands of innocent people based on your profound ingorance and unwillingness to actually examine the facts of the matter, and in your haste to barf all over the group you paid no attention whatsoever to the sentiment behind your words, which I would (and have) characterized as "kill them all and let God sort them out". That makes you the flip side of the terrorist coin. (Miss the Crusades, do you?) On top of that, when it's clearly shown that you're wrong, you just plow right ahead, unwilling to be man enough to concede any error. You're one of those "patriots" that takes pot shots at the local mosque when he's had a little too much malt liquor. You're one of those God-fearing Americans that leaves non-descript "packages" on their doorsteps, and then sits back and laughs all the while not even thinking about the impact that your actions have on the rest of us; or the fact that your anger is horribly misdirected. It wouldn't surprise me a bit to learn that you (or your actions) made the local news right after 9/11. You're just the sort that our police and volunteers wasted so much time protecting the local Muslims and mosques from. I could easily go on, but what's the point? I'll just sum up my thoughts in a few words.

My shit is more patriotic than you.

> They are barbarians > who never left the 13th century, and it is time they are exterminated.

Boy...it's a good thing that no one was around to nuke -us- back when -we- living in the 13th century. I say we kill everyone that doesn't have electricity. Of course, I suspect that means that 90% of your family in the hills is gonna get it. ;)

I can quote Aquinas too, although I usually have to brush my teeth afterwards.

"Most men seem to live according to sense rather than reason."

"Reason in man is rather like God in the world."

"The Jews should not be allowed to keep what they have obtained from others by usury; it were best that they were compelled to work so that they could earn their living instead of doing nothing but becoming more avaricious."

You do realize, don't you, that Aquinas was an anti-semite? I'm laughing my ass off right now. At you. Do you ever feel like you're walking around with a bullseye on your chest? You're an easy mark.

Oops! My bad. I was wrong. He only did it to this particular part of the thread.

See, Leroy? It was easy. I was wrong, and I admit it. You can do it too!

Or was it an intentional error, as an object lesson for you? <eg>

Coming in faintly here. Morse only, so far
The code doesn't match what is shown above.

It's more like:

-.-- -.--  ------------ <<very long single dash

Not 100 percent sure though. there is some code in the background, very faint which I can't make out.

I've already heard enough Chinese opera to last me a lifetime. It's all over the bands day and night.

Microwave ovens use a frequency of around 2.45 GHz, much higher than the 800 MHz cellphones, however close to the 2.5 GHz cordless phones.  It's not necessarily the frequency that one should be concerned about, but rather the relative RF power density levels produced by each device and its proximity to biological systems.  Because cell phones/cordless phones emit such a small power density levels, there is no observable biological effect, i.e. heating tissue.  Microwave ovens on the other hand are purposefully designed to heat media in via HUGH amounts of RF deposition in the oven chamber via more than 1000 watts.

The distinction between a cordless phone/cellular phone and a microwave oven can not be more clear. It like a match stick burning at a distance of several feet and a roaring fireplace fire at the same distance...one will  not have any effect on you, the other will certainly warm your skin. Its as simple as that.

Anyone know the answer to the following?

1. Where  can get a replacement teledcopic antenna for the RF2200?  (I am using a rough equivalent - very rough - from Radio Shack, and would like to get back to original)

2. Any tips on repairingthe gyro-antenna so that it pops up and locks in place like it did when new?

Thanks,

Jose

Microwave ovens use a frequency of around 2.45 GHz, not 800 MHz like cellphones, however close to the 2.5 GHz cordless phones. Microwave ovens on the other hand are purposefully designed to heat media in via HUGH amounts of RF deposition in the oven chamber via more than 1000 watts.  It takes hugh amounts of RF to heat tissue because the effect is so inefficient being we are mostly water.  Long chain molecues are more efficient at absorbing RF, but again it takes very large amounts of RF to produce any heating effect from friction caused by vibrating the long chain molecules together.

The distinction between a cordless phone/cellular phone and a microwave oven cannot be more clear. It like a match stick burning at a distance of several feet and a roaring fireplace fire at the same distance...one will  not have any effect on you, the other will certainly warm your skin. Well, the propagation generators were down for maintenance for a while but they are back up and running now so propagation should be good.

I thought to myself, haven't I heard this story already? Isn't a year old?

So I went to that page's source code, where I read:

"<!-- Published on Friday July 26,  7:51am ET using feature.t -->"

Then I went to http://www.earth.com/calendar?7%2F2002

The last Friday, July 26, was in the year 2002.

This story is two years old.

Is there a Voice of Chechnya? I know how to find the Voice of Russia, but do the Chechnyans have a radio station too?

KS,

The math is simple.

20,000 Terrorist who are willing to die and unlimited 'soft' targets here in the USofA and so called American Interest over seas.

They (the Terorist) only have to be right once to create an act of Terror.  The USofA has to be right 100% of the time.

Examples are the recent Terrorist Acts in Russia.

As to your 'reply':  The Argument has nothing to do with my intellect; but your above statements clearly demostrate yours [.]

The AA has an actual knob for volume and switches on the top, the AAA has an increase/decrease button and switches on the back.

They both sound the same to me.

At present they seem to have 3 100 kw transmitters, an older Passport suggests they may be running at 40 kw at times. I'm not even sure if they run more than one at a time these days.

Passport should list a few email addresses, you might contact them to inquire.

Hearing both RRI Serui (4604.9) and Fak Fak (4789.95) here this morning at 1200.
Fak Fak has Serui beat by a little, and propagation does not seem to be as good as it was yesterday morning.

Also have a weak signal from presumed Makassar on 4749.93.

He wanted to ban shotguns?  I heard he had sponsored legislation to ban assault rifles, but I wasn't aware he was against shotguns.  Tell me more.

Here's a link to the bill:

Apparently the shotgun he was given is a semi-automatic, and the grip meets the definition of a pistol grip as defined in the bill.

Let's see now. Bush got into Yale because his father was a Yale alumni with big bucks. GW had a C average at Yale and Harvard, the lowest grade you can get there and not fail out. His professors and classmates all recall him as being, at best, a mediocre student with little potential. Yeah, Bush's academic accomplishments are really what you ought to be touting.

He is just simply unable to discern truth from fiction. He's still looking for that PhD he lied about having, and trying to figure out why he was stupid enough to call me on the phone and try and blame me for his 'firing' from Louisville Technical Institute.

He was not fired, a fact that was readily checked by calling Louisville Technical Institute.

Bryant likes to play the victim.

You, at one time, tried to tout the fact that you had a PhD. You did not.

I don't recall GWB ever trying to claim a degree he did not have.

You're kinda like Kerry, trying to claim things he did not have, or did not earn.

Despite my love of buttons, knobs and switches, this is the radio I most enjoy using(versus Drake SPR-4 and SW-2, JRC NRD-525, and Lowe HF-150). Is it  the warm yellowish glow of the analog S-meter and digital frequency display? Maybe a little. But its primary virtue is the clear, intelligible audio it sends to an external speaker. And it's that recoverable audio that this is all about, isn't it? I've read this quality is in large measure a by-product of the exceptionally low phase noise produced by Paul's (owner of Palstar) circuit design.

Would it be nice to have IF shift, IF notch filtering, synchronous detection, . . . . .? Sure, but at what cost? But if Palstar releases a 'super R-30' someone's gonna hafta hide my credit card.

I can't compare the filters, as I have only the one R-30 (with 2 Collins.) I'd suggest you call them and have Paul or an assistant advise you what best fits your needs. I know there are times he's suggested the lower cost ceramics over the Collins. The Muratas he used were two of that company's best models, but are no longer being made. Paul was designing his own as  replacements for when his stock finally runs out.

Ken.

Just because Fox News, Newsmax, and WorldNetDaily didn't report it doesn't mean that it didn't happen:

Big deal. Time for action. Time for the so-called moderate Muslims to step up to the plate and do something about it. They need to establish a TIT line (turn in terrorists) like we have TIP (turn in poachers). :-)

Alas, the all too frequent parrotting on this list supports your comment.  I am reminded of the broader nature of a truth offered by a priest who was teaching <CAUTION:four syllable word follows> hermeneutics: The Bible is a mirror; when an ass peers in, he will not find a theologian peering back.

The party of Lincoln and Liberty was transmogrified into the party of hairy-backed swamp developers and corporate shills, faith-based economists, fundamentalist bullies with Bibles, Christians of convenience, freelance racists, misanthropic frat boys, shrieking midgets of AM radio, tax cheats, nihilists in golf pants, brownshirts in pinstripes, sweatshop tycoons, hacks, fakirs, aggressive dorks, Lamborghini libertarians, people who believe Neil Armstrong�s moonwalk was filmed in Roswell, New Mexico, little honkers out to diminish the rest of us, Newt�s evil spawn and their Etch-A-Sketch president, a dull and rigid man suspicious of the free flow of information and of secular institutions, whose philosophy is a jumble of badly sutured body parts trying to walk. Hi John & dxAce,

I didn't try for Fak Fak when I logged Serui because I was concentrating on trans-Pacific MW last week. I was just briefly checking a few of the weaker Indonesian frequencies, like Manggarai on 2960 and Serui.

I note in my logs that I last heard Fak Fak on July 9th at a Grayland DXpedition. Here's the log:

INDONESIA 4790, 1233-1313, RRI Fak Fak Jul 9 Soft lagu romantik tunes in Indonesian, continuous from 1233 tune-in. Powerhouse signal level, but some swisher QRM. No break or announcers at top of hour. Male announcer with ID at 1310, and back into music. (Atkins-WA)

Regarding Serui's frequency, John, I've noted them on 4604.9v lately. However, back at the end of August they were 4606.5.

In my opinion, Steve and John's reception of Serui is more impressive than mine, given your topography and QTH, local noise sources, and antenna limitations you may have. Although my DXing in Puyallup is in the RF "shadow" of strong Seattle/Tacoma broadcasters, my reception is enhanced by:

-Kiwa BCB filter + extension filter for shortwave DXing (really helps the RF blocking/desense from the local MW powerhouses)
-underground AC power mains for about 1/2-mile radius from here
-2 Beverage antennas, one "aimed" right at PNG/Irian Jaya
-no horizon blockage
-although I'm about 90 miles inland from the ocean, it's a mostly water path from here to my favorite targets

Ya wanna talk tough DX targets from my location? All of Latin America (not really a region of interest for me though) and Africa (which I'd love to hear more often). African DX is loads of fun on morning longpath, with a southwest Beverage antenna at the coast, around local sunrise. I've had the strongest African signals on the morning longpath. BTW, mid-winter is best for this.

Guy

>Anyone have one of these and do you recommend. It looks like one of the >old Lowes to me.They were pretty good.Are the C or CC models worth it?

Beats me.  I have the R30CC and haven't tried the bare R30.  The Collins filters are very sharp, to the point where there are varying degrees of a "whoosh" sound like on a good CW filter.  However, the AM-mode Collins filter is supposed to be narrower than the AM-mode Murata filter to begin with--that is, at -6dB as opposed to -60dB--and I'll say that the AM-mode Collins filter is very good at keeping adjacent stations at bay.  I find myself tuning +/- 600 Hz to improve the fidelity of a station, which in the end beats not having that wiggle room.

The sad thing is that you have to get both Collins filters in order to get the AM-mode filter.  The SSB filters are said to be a lot alike in performance.  I simply concluded that I had enough radios with broad filters, and it was time for a change.  I didn't expect the filters to be this tight, and it took some time to get fully used to it.

Otherwise, I agree with most of what the other posters have stated.  A departure from one post, though:  You can get the R30 to overload with a good enough ground and a short enough antenna plugged into the high-impedance jack. That said, the longwire that I used on vacation was something like 330 feet long, and I had no overload problems and excellent mediumwave AM reception. [Shortwave was great, too, but it was my luck that President Reagan died on the first day of my vacation, so I felt the need to do daytime AM DX.]  In an area where my Sony ICF-SW7600GR--not a bad AM receiver by any means--could hear only four or five AM stations without a Select-a-Tenna and maybe 70 stations with it, the band was pretty much full on the Palstar.

If there was anything that surprised me about the radio, it was the SP30 speaker that I bought with it, well worth the sixty bucks or so.  If I had to do it over again and had to choose between tighter filters and having that speaker, I'm not sure what I would do.

Hiya...

Nepal has a shortwave station, Radio Nepal.  According to Passport and a few other lists, they broadcast in English:

02:15-02:25 UTC, Winter 5005, Summer 3230, 6100,7165

08:15-08:25 UTC, Summer 6100, 3230, 7165

14:15-14:25 UTC, Winter 5005, Summer 3230, 6100,7165

The problem is, they are only 250 watts.  What do you say the chances are that it can be heard anyplace in North or South or Central America ???

This statement makes it sound like Russia is the good parent and the Chewchnyans are just being nasty.  After the thing in Russia, I am surprised that the terrorism isn't worse.  The Russians have been beating on Chechnya's citizens as gruesomely as though Uncle Joe were still in power.  The American colonies split with England over taxes, for God's sake - what if "the Motherland" were kidnapping your family members without warrants and killing your kin?  You'd fight back too - unless you were a miserable coward.  I would fight back, even as desperately as the Chechnyans.

I fully agree, the mainstream Muslims have not been as forthcoming as they should about how stupidly violently their extreme elements have been acting.  I often wonder if the entire Muslim world is not cracking at the seams and aiming us into WWIII.  But even if I were convinced that this were true, it would still be an inescapable fact that impoverished and powerless Muslims in some places in the world are being harrassed to the point where they feel they have no choice. Chechnya is one of those places.  Russia should just let them go...keeping them is not worth a gruesome protracted civil guerrila war.

Hi Michael,

My 2003 Passport shows the 5005 frequency at 40 & 100 kW, but the latest Domestic Broadcasting Survey (which I trust more) indicates 5 kw, and ex-100 kW. Hmm... interesting that they dropped their transmitter power dramatically; probably a cost-savings move.

Irregardless of the power, I hear Nepal on 5005 occasionally, although it's never very strong. I've had English on their frequency in the 1415-1425 timeframe, mid-winters. Best reception of Nepal for me has been on DXpeditions to the WA coast.

I see the listing in 2003 Passport for 40 & 100kW.   I remember an article that I read on a DX'ing web site... I wish I could remember what it was I saw... It said that Radio Nepal was cutting down their power, possibly going back to how they did in when they first started up... With a small 250 watt transmitter that would only cover Nepal itself.  It is possible I misunderstood the article I read.  Perhaps they cut back on power, but not all the way down to 250 watts.

I have tried many times to pull it in.  I can see that there is a carrier there at times as I use ECSS and I can hear the het as I tune up and down from the zero beat.... I can also hear some very faint (I think) modulation, but I can never hear it enough to ID it.  So, I dont even know in fact if the het I'm getting is from Nepal.  I want to find out how much juice they are actually using.

Michael

Any politician that supported such extreme positions and behavior would have a short career these days.

DX Ace,

Well today John 'ff' Kerry did it.

Had a Photo-Op concerning the 1000th American Service Man Killed in Iraq.

Bad News for America, is Good News for the John 'ff' Kerry
"Anti-Bush" Propaganda Machine.

John 'ff' Kerry is acting out the 1970's again and turning his back on our troops while they are at war.

It's Possible Michael:

My guess:
You first need an "open window" to that area;
Check out other transmitters in that or similar part of the continent..
Then
You need a quiet, quiet frequency and lots of antenna;
& a good receiver helps...

Graham book: Inquiry into 9/11, Saudi ties blocked WASHINGTON - Two of the Sept. 11, 2001, hijackers had a support network in the United States that included agents of the Saudi government, and the Bush administration and FBI blocked a congressional investigation into that relationship, Sen. Bob Graham wrote in a book to be released Tuesday.

The discovery of the financial backing of the two hijackers ''would draw a direct line between the terrorists and the government of Saudi Arabia, and trigger an attempted coverup by the Bush administration,'' the Florida Democrat wrote.

And in Graham's book, Intelligence Matters, obtained by The Herald Saturday, he makes clear that some details of that financial support from Saudi Arabia were in the 27 pages of the congressional inquiry's final report that were blocked from release by the administration, despite the pleas of leaders of both parties on the House and Senate intelligence committees.

Graham also revealed that Gen. Tommy Franks told him on Feb. 19, 2002, just four months after the invasion of Afghanistan, that many important resources -- including the Predator drone aircraft crucial to the search for Osama bin Laden and al Qaeda leaders -- were being shifted to prepare for a war against Iraq.

You'd be best to look for them in Nepali rather than English unless you are on the west coast... they are on earlier than that in Nepali.

Do you think that Bob Graham just might be trying to do a bit of CYA in this whole matter?

If he knew all of this to be true earlier why did he not say so? Is the bastard's Senate seat more important than national security?

He's just another jackass poseur like Kerry.

Leroy, Leroy...you disappoint me.

I assume that anyone who tried to respond to this latest puke from Leroy noticed it themselves, but he altered the headers so that any responses to his post go to alt.test only. They'll never show up in r.r.s. And now that I look further, he did that to the other post that I see from him. I'm going to do a bit of research and see if I can determine if this Leroy is a newcomer to the group, or a regular user. For his sake, I hope he's new. And FWIW, I'll out him if I turn up anything.

Really, Leroy. Such a juvenile trick!

I should have seen it coming.

And now, the post that Leroy won't have to look in alt.test for:

First of all, he didn't bring it up. I did. Do you need a scorecard to keep up with who's busting your chops?

Actually, on reflection -you- brought it up when you said that all terrorists were Muslims...and then when you tried to qualify your statement (or back pedaled) and said that all -international- terrorists were Muslims. Either way, you're wrong. Wow...there's a surprise.

Why don't you visit this link, and educate yourself? You're obviously -capable- of reading...how about comprehending?

http://www.infoplease.com/spot/terrorism7.html#greece

"In August 2001, Colombian police arrested four members of the Irish Republican Army (IRA) who were visiting facilities operated by the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC). One of the IRA members was reportedly teaching English to terrorists at a FARC camp, while the others had apparently been showing the Colombians how to manufacture gasoline bombs. One of those arrested, Niall Connally, is said to be the IRA's chief operative in Latin America, coordinating terrorist operations from Cuba."

Gosh. That's only three years ago. And those arrests didn't crush their organizations in Ireland, Colombia or Cuba, so I feel safe in assuming that they're still in business despite your feeble protestations to the contrary. And the article is about the Irish (Sinn Fein) in Colombia and Cuba; I'd say that qualifies as international. And you don't see too many red-headed whiskey drinking Muslims these days, if I may be excused the stereo-type to illustrate my point. So...not all international terrorists are Muslims.

Want some salt with that crow?

No, of course not. You still think that you're right.

Oh, as for tellimg me that I was stupid to bring up the IRA? Oh, never mind. I've proven my point. I'm right, you're wrong. Period, end of story. I'm betting that you won't/can't admit it.

> Brains are not your long suit, pantywaist.  Into the kill file you go.
> <PLONK>

Again, I think that it's -me- that you want to kill file, thus showing -your- lack of mental acuity. (Not to mention your inability to defend your position, which is of course understandable since it's indefensible.) You can't even keep up with this thread, much less matters international in scope. But either way, if you kill file everyone that disagrees with you you're going to be the only playing on Usenet...at least as far as you can tell. Things will probably get pretty boring when the only posts you see are ones that you made yourself. Why waste time? Just leave Usenet all together. Really, you're nowhere near as fun as I thought you'd be.

Actually, when push comes to shove I don't believe that you're plonking anyone. You're just saying that, and then altering headers so that you can claim never to have seen the posts that show you for the mistaken person that you are. Bad Leroy! Bad! Bad!

Come on, confess...you're trolling, right? Admit it, Leroy, even if it's not true. It's your only way to save even a scrap of credibility.

Three things:

1) You need to recheck the frequency of the magnetrons in microwave ovens.
2) You need to recompare the power levels between microwave ovens and cell phones (cough 0.3 W v. 1500 W, a factor of 5000 difference

Advertising is sold by delivery of audience. If you cut spot load by 50%, and do not increase listenership, your revenue decreases by half (assuming you are selling all your inventory).

There are simple metrics applied to the buying of ad time, and they relate to the cost per listener, experessed as cost per thousand, cost per point, etc. Simply reducing spot loads does not improve the rate on the remaining accounts.

Actually, a DJ listens far more per week than all but the most agressive listeners. The best way to find out what listeners want is to ask the listeners. Which is what most major stations do.

It's researched and very effective in increasing memorability through repetition. As are bookends.

Generally, if this happens, the advertiser has paid extra to make it happen.
Because it works so well.

Many station groups have long limited commercial percentages to well below what is considered excessive. There is nothing new in this. Oddly, back in the 50's and 60's when many claim such great radio was done, the FCC had to actually create an implied guideline of 18 minutes an hour. Most stations today are well below that, and one I work with are in the 10 minute range consistently.

Advertisers do not call stations, especially big ones. Radio does not work this way, advertising does not work this way, marketing does not work this way

This is nothing new. I ran a top rated FM in the late 60's that ran 2 minutes of spots an hour. It billed as much as any station in the market. There are plenty of examples of this.

We've veered way off topic, and I'm not going to push through posts in this thread to rec.radio.broadcasting anymore. If you want to continue posting in this thread in newsgroups other than RRB, that's your choice, but no more in RRB. The thread stopped being about radio after (roughly) the second post, or maybe the third.

Cheers,

There are, what, about twenty different HATE-BUSH books now, against Unfit For Service.

But the libs have good reason to bitch loudly. After all, people are actually READING Unfit For Service.

An extensive mod is not needed for the AR7030, since its "9.5 kHz" position is wide enough. All that's needed is a downmixer with f_mix = 467 kHz to be attached to the receiver's 455 kHz IF output.

The CODAR transmitters are causing some serious QRM on the tropical bands in the range 4500-5000/Khz. I've emailed some of the operators, which are usually universities, to remind them that their transmitters are disrupting certain international broadcasts. However the FCC encouraged them to use these frequencies because shortwave listeners are at the bottom of the barrel when it comes to interference from licensed stations such as CODAR. The current FCC chairman doesn't seem to care about the possible interference from the proposed BPL systems, so I doubt he's concerned about CODAR interference to shortwave listeners.

For safety reasons, our Bonaire relay station will stop broadcasting this evening at 1900 UTC, and the staff will be evacuated, while Hurricane Ivan passes through the area. Radio Netherlands Acting D-G Jan Hoek says "The relay station consists of 20 antennas, of which the highest is about 100 metres. With such high windspeeds, the transmitting station is a dangerous area. The safety of our staff is naturally the number one priority. We remain in close contact with our colleagues on the island who are keeping us informed of the latest situation." At this time it is not known how long the station will be off the air.

The following transmissions will be taken over by our Flevo transmitter site. Others will be off the air.

1900-2057 UTC English 17810 kHz
2100-2157 UTC Dutch 15315 kHz and 17810 kHz

Fahrenheit 9/11: 'The Less That See It, The Better For Bush'

Michael Moore has pulled his controversial Fahrenheit 9/11 out of contention for a 'sure bet' Oscar nomination for Best Documentary in a bid to get the film shown to a wider audience on broadcast TV, and influence the outcome of this year's heated Presidential Election.

According to a recent Gallup survey, more than half of all American adults have either seen or expect to see Moore's wildly popular movie, Fahrenheit 9/11, a critical look at the Bush administration's decision to go to war with Iraq. The poll, conducted July 8-11, found that 8% of Americans said they have already seen the movie, 18% expected to see it at a theater, and 30% expected to watch it on DVD or home video.

How odd that you cut off the article before this paragraph:

"In an informal poll conducted by Moore's pollster friend -- who formerly worked for the Republicans -- he found that the 80% of the Fahrenheit 9/11 audiences in three different cities were essentially likely Kerry voters, but 'the movie has galvanized them in a way you rarely see Democrats galvanized.' "

In other words, Moore is preaching to the choir.  Those who see it and like it are already predisposed to like it.  Since they are 4/5 Kerry voters, they are also likely to be unconcerned with the copious amounts of misleading propaganda sprinkled throughout.

BTW, if shown on TV, the movie would still be eligible for a -best picture- nomination, which might actually be more honest than lumping it in with real documentaries.

> Do liberals want abortion on demand? Lo, the Ninth and Fourteenth Amendments, plus their emanations and penumbras, turn out to mean that abortion is nothing less than a woman's constitutional right!
> Can all this be blind evolution? If liberals were more religious, they might suspect the hand of Providence behind it! This marvelous "living document" never seems to impede the liberal agenda in any way.
> On the contrary: it always seems to demand, by a wonderful coincidence, just what liberals are prescribing on other grounds.
> Take abortion. Set aside your own views and feelings about it. Is it really possible that, as the Supreme Court in effect said, all the abortion laws of all 50 states - no matter how restrictive, no matter how permissive - had always been unconstitutional?
> Not only that, but no previous Court, no justice on any Court in all our history - not Marshall, not Story, not Taney, not Holmes, not Hughes, not Frankfurter, not even Warren - had ever been recorded as doubting the constitutionality of those laws. Everyone had always taken it for granted that the states had every right to enact them.
> Are we supposed to believe, in all seriousness, that the Court's ruling in Roe v. Wade was a response to the text of the Constitution, the discernment of a meaning that had eluded all its predecessors, rather than an enactment of the current liberal agenda? Come now.
> And notice that the parts of this "living document" don't develop equally or consistently. The Court has expanded the meaning of some of liberalism's pet rights, such as freedom of speech, to absurd lengths; but it has neglected or even contracted other rights, such as property rights, which liberalism is hostile to.
> In order to appreciate what has happened, you have to stand back from all the details and look at the outline. What follows is a thumbnail history of the Constitution.
>
> In the beginning the states wereindependentandsovereign.Thatis why they were called "states": a state was not yet thought of as a mere subdivision of a larger unit, as is the case now.
> The universal understanding was that in ratifying the Constitution, the 13 states yielded a very little of their sovereignty, but kept most of it.
> Those who were reluctant to ratify generally didn't object to the > powers the Constitution delegated to the federal government. But they were suspicious: they wanted assurance that if those few powers were granted, other powers, never granted, wouldn't be seized too.

> In The Federalist, Hamilton and Madison argued at some length that under the proposed distribution of power the federal government would never be able to "usurp", as they put it, those other powers.
> Madison wrote soothingly in Federalist No. 45 that the powers of the federal government would be "few and defined," relating mostly to war and foreign policy, while those remaining with the states would be "numerous and indefinite", and would have to do with the everyday domestic life of the country.
> The word usurpation occurs numberless times in the ratification debates, reflecting the chief anxiety the champions of the Constitution had to allay. And as a final assurance, the Tenth Amendment stipulated that the powers not "delegated" to the federal government were "reserved" to the separate states and to the people.
>
> But this wasn't enough to satisfy everyone.
> Well-grounded fears persisted. And during the first half of the nineteenth century, nearly every president, in his inaugural message, felt it appropriate to renew the promise that the powers of the federal government would not be exceeded, nor the reserved powers of the states transgressed.
> The federal government was to remain truly federal, with only a few specified powers, rather than "consolidated" with unlimited powers.
> The Civil War, or the War Between the States if you like, resulted from the suspicion that the North meant to use the power of the Union to destroy the sovereignty of the Southern states.
> Whether or not that suspicion was justified, the war itself produced that very result. The South was subjugated and occupied like a conquered country. Its institutions were profoundly remade by the federal government; the United States of America was taking on the character of an extensive, and highly centralized, empire.
>
> Similar processes were under way in Europe, as small states were consolidated into large ones, setting the stage for the tyrannies and gigantic wars of the twentieth century.
>
> Even so, the three constitutional amendments ratified after the war contain a significant clause: "Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation".
> Why is this significant? Because it shows that even the conquerors still understood that a new power of Congress required a constitutional amendment. It couldn't just be taken by majority vote, as it would be today.
> If the Congress then had wanted a national health plan, it would have begun by asking the people for an amendment to the Constitution authorizing it to legislate in the area of health care.
> The immediate purpose of the Fourteenth Amendment was to provide a constitutional basis for a proposed civil rights act. But the Supreme Court soon found other uses for the Fourteenth Amendment. It began striking down state laws as unconstitutional.
>
> This was an important new twist in American constitutional law.
> Hamilton, in arguing for judicial review in Federalist No. 78, had envisioned the Court as a check on Congress, resisting the illicit consolidation or centralization of power.

> And our civics books still describe the function of checks and balances in terms of the three branches of the federal government mutually controlling each other.

> But in fact, the Court was now countermanding the state legislatures, where the principle of checks and balances had no meaning, since those state legislatures had no reciprocal control on the Court. This development eventually set the stage for the convulsive Supreme Court rulings of the late twentieth century, from Brown v. Board of Education to Roe v. Wade.

> The big thing to recognize here is that the Court had become the very opposite of the institution Hamilton and others had had in mind.

> Instead of blocking the centralization of power in the federal government, the Court was assisting it.

> The original point of the federal system was that the federal government would have very little to say about the internal affairs of the states. But the result of the Civil War was that the federal government had a great deal to say about those affairs - in Northern as well as Southern states.

> Note that this trend toward centralization was occurring largely under Republican presidents.

> The Democrat Grover Cleveland was one of the last great spokesmen for federalism. He once vetoed a modest $10,000 federal grant for drought relief on grounds that there was no constitutional power to do it.

> If that sounds archaic, remember that the federal principle remained strong long enough that during the 1950s, the federal highway program had to be called a "defense" measure in order to win approval, and federal loans to college students in the 1960s were absurdly called "defense" loans for the same reason.

> The Tenth Amendment is a refined taste, but it has always had a few devotees. But federalism suffered some serious wounds during the presidency of Woodrow Wilson.

> First came the income tax, its constitutionality established by the Sixteenth Amendment; this meant that every U.S. citizen was now, for the first time, directly accountable to the federal government.

> Then the Seventeenth Amendment required that senators be elected by popular vote rather than chosen by state legislators; this meant that the states no longer had their own representation in Congress, so that they now lost their remaining control over the federal government.

> The Eighteenth Amendment, establishing Prohibition, gave the federal government even greater powers over the country's internal affairs.

> All these amendments were ominous signs that federalism was losing its traditional place in the hearts, and perhaps the minds, of Americans.

> But again, notice that these expansions of federal power were at least achieved by amending the Constitution, as the Constitution itself requires. The Constitution doesn't claim to be a "living document". It is written on paper, not rubber.

> In fact, the radicals of the early twentieth century despaired of achieving socialism or communism as long as the Constitution remained.

> They regarded it as the critical obstacle to their plans, and thought a revolution would be necessary to remove it. As The New Republic wrote: "To have a socialist society we must have a new Constitution."

> That's laying it on the line!

> Unfortunately, the next generation of collectivists would be less

> Court has said about the Constitution in more than 400 volumes of commentary.

> This can only mean that the commentary has displaced the original text, and that "We the People" have been supplanted by "We the Lawyers."

> We the People can't read and understand our own Constitution. We have to have it explained to us by the professionals. Moreover, if the Court enjoys oracular status, it can't really be criticized, because it can do no wrong.

> We may dislike its results, but future rulings will have to be derived from them as precedents, rather than from the text and logic of the Constitution.

> And notice that the "conservative" justices appointed by Republican presidents have by and large upheld not the original Constitution, but the most liberal interpretations of the Court itself - notably on the subject of abortion, which I'll return to in a minute.

> To sum up this little constitutional history.

> The history of the Constitution is the story of its inversion. The original understanding of the Constitution has been reversed.

> The Constitution creates a presumption against any power not plainly delegated to the federal government and a corresponding presumption in favor of the rights and powers of the states and the people. But we now have a sloppy presumption in favor of federal power.

> Most people assume the federal government can do anything it isn't plainly forbidden to do.

> The Ninth and Tenth Amendments were adopted to make the principle of the Constitution as clear as possible.

> Hamilton argued against adding a Bill of Rights, on grounds that it would be redundant and confusing. He thought it would seem to imply that the federal government had more powers than it had been given.

> Why say, he asked, that the freedom of the press shall not be infringed, when the federal government would have no power by which it could be infringed?

> And you can even make the case that he was exactly right. He understood, at any rate, that our freedom is safer if we think of the Constitution as a list of powers rather than as a list of rights. Be that as it may, the Bill of Rights was adopted, but it was designed to meet his objection.

> The Ninth Amendment says: "The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people."

> The Tenth says: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

> Now what these two provisions mean is pretty simple. The Ninth means that the list of the people's rights in the Constitution is not meant to be complete - that they still have many other rights, like the right to travel or to marry, which may deserve just as much respect as the right not to have soldiers quartered in one's home in peacetime.

> The Tenth, on the other hand, means that the list of powers "delegated" to the federal government is complete - and that any other powers the government assumed would be, in the Framers' habitual word, "usurped".

> As I said earlier, the Founders believed that our rights come from God, and the government's powers come from us. So the Constitution can't list all our rights, but it can and does list all the federal government's powers.
> You can think of the Constitution as a sort of antitrust act for government, with the Ninth and Tenth Amendments at its core. It's remarkable that the same liberals who think business monopolies are sinister think monopolies of political power are progressive.
> When they can't pass their programs because of the constitutional safeguards, they complain about "gridlock" - a clich� that shows they miss the whole point of the enumeration and separation of powers.
> Well, I don't have to tell you that this way of thinking is absolutely alien to that of today's politicians and pundits.
>
> Can you imagine John Kerry, George Bush, Al Gore, Dan Rostenkowski, or even Tom Brokaw having a conversation about political principles with any of the Founding Fathers? If you can, you must have a vivid fantasy life. And the result of the loss of our original political idiom has been, as I say, to invert the original presumptions.
> The average American, whether he has had high-school civics or a degree in political science, is apt to assume that the Constitution somehow empowers the government to do nearly anything, while implicitly limiting our rights by listing them.
> Not that anyone would say it this way, but it's as if the Bill of Rights had said that the enumeration of the federal government's powers in the Constitution is not meant to deny or disparage any other powers it may choose to claim, while the rights not given to the people in the Constitution are reserved to the federal government to give or withhold, and the states may be progressively stripped of their original powers.
> What it comes down to is that we don't really have an operative Constitution anymore. The federal government defines its own powers day by day. It's limited not by the list of its powers in the Constitution, but by whatever it can get away with politically.
> Just as the president can now send troops abroad to fight without a declaration of war, Congress can pass a national health care program without a constitutional delegation of power. The only restraint left is political opposition.
> If you suspect I'm overstating the change from our original principles, I give you the late Justice Hugo Black. In a 1965 case called Griswold v. Connecticut, the Court struck down a law forbidding the sale of contraceptives on grounds that it violated a right of "privacy." (This supposed right, of course, became the basis for the Court's even more radical 1973 ruling in Roe v. Wade, but that's another story.)
> Justice Black dissented in the Griswold case on the following ground: "I like my privacy as well as the next [man]," he wrote, "but I am nevertheless compelled to admit that government has a right to invade it unless prohibited by some specific constitutional provision."
>
> What a hopelessly muddled - and really sinister - misconception of the relation between the individual and the state: government has a right to invade our privacy, unless prohibited by the Constitution.
> You don't have to share the Court's twisted view of the right of privacy in order to be shocked that one of its members takes this view > of the "right" of government to invade privacy.

> It gets crazier. In 1993 the Court handed down one of the most bizarre decisions of all time.
>
> For two decades, enemies of legal abortion had been supporting Republican candidates in the hope of filling the Court with appointees who would review Roe v. Wade.
> In Planned Parenthood v. Casey, the Court finally did so. But even with eight Republican appointees on the Court, the result was not what the conservatives had hoped for. The Court reaffirmed Roe.
> Its reasoning was amazing. A plurality opinion - a majority of the five-justice majority in the case - admitted that the Court's previous ruling in Roe might be logically and historically vulnerable.
> But it held that the paramount consideration was that the Court be consistent, and not appear to be yielding to public pressure, lest it lose the respect of the public. Therefore the Court allowed Roe to stand.
>
> Among many things that might be said about this ruling, the most basic is this: The Court in effect declared itself a third party to the controversy, and then, setting aside the merits of the two principals' claims, ruled in its own interest!
> It was as if the referee in a prizefight had declared himself the winner. Cynics had always suspected that the Court did not forget its self-interest in its decisions, but they never expected to hear it say so.
>
> The three justices who signed that opinion evidently didn't realize what they were saying. A distinguished veteran Court-watcher (who approved of Roe, by the way) told me he had never seen anything like it.
> The Court was actually telling us that it put its own welfare ahead of the merits of the arguments before it. In its confusion, it was blurting out the truth.
> But by then, very few Americans could even remember the original constitutional plan. The original plan was as Madison and Tocqueville described it: State government was to be the rule, federal government the exception.
> The states' powers were to be "numerous and indefinite", federal powers "few and defined." This is a matter not only of history, but of iron logic: the Constitution doesn't make sense when read any other way. As Madison asked, why bother listing particular federal powers unless unlisted powers are withheld?
> The unchecked federal government has not only overflowed its banks; it has even created its own economy.
>
> Thanks to its exercise of a myriad of unwarranted powers, it can claim tens of millions of dependents, at least part of whose income is due to the abuse of the taxing and spending powers for their benefit: government employees, retirees, farmers, contractors, teachers, artists, even soldiers.
> Large numbers of these people are paid much more than their market value because the taxpayer is forced to subsidize them.
>

>>But almost nobody raised the basic issue: Where does the federal >>government get the power to legislate in this area? The answer is:
>>NOWHERE.
>>The Constitution lists 18 specific legislative powers of Congress, and >>not a one of them covers national health care.
>>As a matter of fact, none of the delegated powers of Congress - and >>or equally countless regulations of business, large and small, or the >>space program, or farm subsidies, or research grants, or subsidies to >>the arts and humanities, or ... well, you name it, chances are, it's >>unconstitutional.

>>Even the most cynical opponents of the Constitution would be >>dumbfounded to learn that the federal government now tells us where we >>can smoke. We are less free, more heavily taxed, and worse governed >>than our ancestors under British rule. Sometimes this government makes >>me wonder: Was George III really all that bad?
>>Let's be clear about one thing.
>>Constitutional and unconstitutional aren't just simple terms of >>approval and disapproval. A bad law may be perfectly constitutional. A >>wise and humane law may be unconstitutional. But what is almost >>certainly bad is a constant disposition to thwart or disregard the >>Constitution.
>>It's not just a matter of what is sometimes called the "original >>intent" of the authors of the Constitution. What really matters is the >>common, explicit, unchallenged understanding of the Constitution, on >>all sides, over several generations. There was no mystery about it.
>>The logic of the Constitution was so elegantly simple that a foreign >>observer could explain it to his countrymen in two sentences.
>>Alexis de Tocqueville wrote that "the attributes of the federal >>government were carefully defined [in the Constitution], and all that >>was not included among them was declared to remain to the governments >>of the individual states. Thus the government of the states remained >>the rule, and that of the federal government the exception".
>>The Declaration of Independence, which underlies the Constitution, >>holds that the rights of the people come from God, and that the powers >>of the government come from the people.
>>Let me repeat that: According to the Declaration of Independence, the >>rights of the people come from God, and the powers of the government >>come from the people. Unless you grasp this basic order of things, >>you'll have a hard time understanding the Constitution.
>>The Constitution was the instrument by which the American people >>granted, or delegated, certain specific powers to the federal >>government. Any power not delegated was withheld, or "reserved".
>>As we'll see later, these principles are expressed particularly in the >>Ninth and Tenth Amendments, two crucial but neglected provisions of >>the Constitution. Let me say it yet again: The rights of the people >>come from God. The powers of government come from the people.
>>The American people delegated the specific powers they wanted the >>federal government to have through the Constitution. Any additional >>powers they wanted to grant were supposed to be added by amendment.
>>It's largely because we've forgotten these simple principles that the >>country is in so much trouble. The powers of the federal government >>have multiplied madly, with only the vaguest justifications and on the >>most slippery pretexts.
>>Its chief business now is not defending our rights but taking and >>redistributing our wealth. It has even created its own economy, the >>tax economy, which is parasitical on the basic and productive >>voluntary economy.
>>Even much of what passes for "national defense" is a kind of hidden >>entitlement program, as was illustrated when President George Bush >>warned some states during the 1992 campaign that Bill Clinton would >>destroy jobs by closing down military bases.

>>Well, if those bases aren't necessary for our defense, they should be >>closed down.
>>Now of course nobody in American politics, not even the most fanatical >>liberal, will admit openly that he doesn't care what the Constitution >>says and isn't going to let it interfere with his agenda.
>>Everyone professes to respect it - even the Supreme Court. That's the >>problem. The U.S. Constitution serves the same function as the British >>royal family: it offers a comforting symbol of tradition and >>continuity, thereby masking a radical change in the actual system of >>power.
>>So the people who mean to do without the Constitution have come up >>with a slogan to keep up appearances: they say the Constitution is a >>"living document", which sounds like a compliment.
>>They say it has "evolved" in response to "changing circumstances," >>etc. They sneer at the idea that such a mystic document could still >>have the same meanings it had two centuries ago, or even, I guess, >>sixty years ago, just before the evolutionary process started >>accelerating with fantastic velocity.
>>These people, who tend with suspicious consistency to be liberals, >>have discovered that the Constitution, whatever it may have meant in >>the past, now means - again, with suspicious consistency - whatever >>suits their present convenience.
>>Do liberals want big federal entitlement programs? Lo, the Interstate >>Commerce Clause turns out to mean that the big federal programs are >>constitutional!
>>Do liberals oppose capital punishment? Lo, the ban on "cruel and >>unusual punishment" turns out to mean that capital punishment is >>unconstitutional!
>>Do liberals want abortion on demand? Lo, the Ninth and Fourteenth >>Amendments, plus their emanations and penumbras, turn out to mean that >>abortion is nothing less than a woman's constitutional right!
>>Can all this be blind evolution? If liberals were more religious, they >>might suspect the hand of Providence behind it! This marvelous "living >>document" never seems to impede the liberal agenda in any way.
>>On the contrary: it always seems to demand, by a wonderful >>coincidence, just what liberals are prescribing on other grounds.
>>Take abortion. Set aside your own views and feelings about it. Is it >>really possible that, as the Supreme Court in effect said, all the >>abortion laws of all 50 states - no matter how restrictive, no matter >>how permissive - had always been unconstitutional?
>>Not only that, but no previous Court, no justice on any Court in all >>our history - not Marshall, not Story, not Taney, not Holmes, not >>Hughes, not Frankfurter, not even Warren - had ever been recorded as >>doubting the constitutionality of those laws. Everyone had always >>taken it for granted that the states had every right to enact them.
>>Are we supposed to believe, in all seriousness, that the Court's >>ruling in Roe v. Wade was a response to the text of the Constitution, >>the discernment of a meaning that had eluded all its predecessors, >>rather than an enactment of the current liberal agenda? Come now.
>>And notice that the parts of this "living document" don't develop >>equally or consistently. The Court has expanded the meaning of some of >>liberalism's pet rights, such as freedom of speech, to absurd lengths; >>but it has neglected or even contracted other rights, such as property >>rights, which liberalism is hostile to.

>>In order to appreciate what has happened, you have to stand back from >>all the details and look at the outline. What follows is a thumbnail >>history of the Constitution.
>>In the beginning the states wereindependentandsovereign.Thatis >>why they were called "states": a state was not yet thought of as a >>mere subdivision of a larger unit, as is the case now.
>>The universal understanding was that in ratifying the Constitution, >>the 13 states yielded a very little of their sovereignty, but kept >>most of it.
>>Those who were reluctant to ratify generally didn't object to the >>powers the Constitution delegated to the federal government. But they >>were suspicious: they wanted assurance that if those few powers were >>granted, other powers, never granted, wouldn't be seized too.
>>In The Federalist, Hamilton and Madison argued at some length that >>under the proposed distribution of power the federal government would >>never be able to "usurp", as they put it, those other powers.
>>Madison wrote soothingly in Federalist No. 45 that the powers of the >>federal government would be "few and defined," relating mostly to war >>and foreign policy, while those remaining with the states would be >>"numerous and indefinite", and would have to do with the everyday >>domestic life of the country.
>>The word usurpation occurs numberless times in the ratification >>debates, reflecting the chief anxiety the champions of the >>Constitution had to allay. And as a final assurance, the Tenth >>Amendment stipulated that the powers not "delegated" to the federal >>government were "reserved" to the separate states and to the people.
>>But this wasn't enough to satisfy everyone.
>>Well-grounded fears persisted. And during the first half of the >>nineteenth century, nearly every president, in his inaugural message, >>felt it appropriate to renew the promise that the powers of the >>federal government would not be exceeded, nor the reserved powers of >>the states transgressed.
>>The federal government was to remain truly federal, with only a few >>specified powers, rather than "consolidated" with unlimited powers.
>>The Civil War, or the War Between the States if you like, resulted >>from the suspicion that the North meant to use the power of the Union >>to destroy the sovereignty of the Southern states.
>>Whether or not that suspicion was justified, the war itself produced >>that very result. The South was subjugated and occupied like a >>conquered country. Its institutions were profoundly remade by the >>federal government; the United States of America was taking on the >>character of an extensive, and highly centralized, empire.
>>Similar processes were under way in Europe, as small states were >>consolidated into large ones, setting the stage for the tyrannies and >>gigantic wars of the twentieth century.
>>Even so, the three constitutional amendments ratified after the war >>contain a significant clause: "Congress shall have power to enforce >>this article by appropriate legislation".
>>Why is this significant? Because it shows that even the conquerors >>still understood that a new power of Congress required a >>constitutional amendment. It couldn't just be taken by majority vote, >>as it would be today.

>>If the Congress then had wanted a national health plan, it would have >>begun by asking the people for an amendment to the Constitution >>authorizing it to legislate in the area of health care.
>>The immediate purpose of the Fourteenth Amendment was to provide a >>constitutional basis for a proposed civil rights act. But the Supreme >>Court soon found other uses for the Fourteenth Amendment. It began >>striking down state laws as unconstitutional.
>>This was an important new twist in American constitutional law.
>>Hamilton, in arguing for judicial review in Federalist No. 78, had >>envisioned the Court as a check on Congress, resisting the illicit >>consolidation or centralization of power.
>>And our civics books still describe the function of checks and >>balances in terms of the three branches of the federal government >>mutually controlling each other.
>>But in fact, the Court was now countermanding the state legislatures, >>where the principle of checks and balances had no meaning, since those >>state legislatures had no reciprocal control on the Court. This >>development eventually set the stage for the convulsive Supreme Court >>rulings of the late twentieth century, from Brown v. Board of >>Education to Roe v. Wade.
>>The big thing to recognize here is that the Court had become the very >>opposite of the institution Hamilton and others had had in mind.
>>Instead of blocking the centralization of power in the federal >>government, the Court was assisting it.
>>The original point of the federal system was that the federal >>government would have very little to say about the internal affairs of >>the states. But the result of the Civil War was that the federal >>government had a great deal to say about those affairs - in Northern >>as well as Southern states.
>>Note that this trend toward centralization was occurring largely under >>Republican presidents.
>>The Democrat Grover Cleveland was one of the last great spokesmen for >>federalism. He once vetoed a modest $10,000 federal grant for drought >>relief on grounds that there was no constitutional power to do it.
>>If that sounds archaic, remember that the federal principle remained >>strong long enough that during the 1950s, the federal highway program >>had to be called a "defense" measure in order to win approval, and >>federal loans to college students in the 1960s were absurdly called >>"defense" loans for the same reason.
>>The Tenth Amendment is a refined taste, but it has always had a few >>devotees. But federalism suffered some serious wounds during the >>presidency of Woodrow Wilson.
>>First came the income tax, its constitutionality established by the >>Sixteenth Amendment; this meant that every U.S. citizen was now, for >>the first time, directly accountable to the federal government.
>>Then the Seventeenth Amendment required that senators be elected by >>popular vote rather than chosen by state legislators; this meant that >>the states no longer had their own representation in Congress, so that >>they now lost their remaining control over the federal government.
>>The Eighteenth Amendment, establishing Prohibition, gave the federal >>government even greater powers over the country's internal affairs.

>>All these amendments were ominous signs that federalism was losing its >>traditional place in the hearts, and perhaps the minds, of Americans.
>>But again, notice that these expansions of federal power were at least >>achieved by amending the Constitution, as the Constitution itself >>requires. The Constitution doesn't claim to be a "living document". It >>is written on paper, not rubber.
>>In fact, the radicals of the early twentieth century despaired of >>achieving socialism or communism as long as the Constitution remained.
>>They regarded it as the critical obstacle to their plans, and thought >>a revolution would be necessary to remove it. As The New Republic >>wrote: "To have a socialist society we must have a new Constitution."
>>That's laying it on the line!
>>Unfortunately, the next generation of collectivists would be less >>candid in their contempt for the federal system. Once they learned to >>feign devotion to the Constitution they secretly regarded as obsolete, >>the laborious formality of amendment would no longer be necessary.
>>They could merely pretend that the Constitution was on their side.
>>After Franklin Roosevelt restaffed the Supreme Court with his >>compliant cronies, the federal government would be free to make up its >>own powers as it went along, thanks to the notion that the >>Constitution was a malleable "living document" whose central meaning >>could be changed, and even reversed, by ingenious interpretation.
>>Roosevelt's New Deal brought fascist-style central planning to America
>>- what some call the "mixed economy" but Hilaire Belloc called the >>Servile State - and his highhanded approach to governance soon led to >>conflict with the Court, which found several of his chief measures >>unconstitutional.
>>Early in his second term, Roosevelt retaliated by trying to "pack" the >>Court by increasing the number of seats. This power play alienated >>even many of his allies, but it turned out not to be necessary.
>>After 1937, the Court began seeing things Roosevelt's way. It voted as >>he wished; several members obligingly retired; and soon he had >>appointed a majority of the justices. The country virtually got a new >>Constitution.
>>Roosevelt's Court soon decided that the Tenth Amendment was a "truism" >>of no real force. This meant that almost any federal act was ipso >>facto constitutional, and the powers "reserved" to the states and the >>people were just leftovers the federal government didn't want, like >>the meal left for the jackals by the satisfied lion.
>>There was almost no limit, now, on what the federal government could >>do. In effect, the powers of the federal government no longer had to >>come from the people by constitutional delegation: they could be >>created by simple political power.
>>Roosevelt also set the baneful precedent of using entitlement >>programs, such as Social Security, to buy some people's votes with >>other people's money. It was both a fatal corruption of democracy and >>the realization of the Servile State in America. The class of voting >>parasites has been swelling ever since.
>>So the New Deal didn't just expand the power of the federal >>government; that had been done before. The New Deal did much deeper >>mischief: it struck at the whole principle of constitutional >>resistance to federal expansion.

>>Congress didn't need any constitutional amendment to increase its >>powers; it could increase its own powers ad hoc, at any time, by >>simple majority vote. All this, of course, would have seemed monstrous >>to our ancestors.
>>Even Alexander Hamilton, who favored a relatively strong central >>government in his time, never dreamed of a government so powerful.
>>The Court suffered a bloody defeat at Roosevelt's hands, and since his >>time it has never found a major act of Congress unconstitutional.
>>This has allowed the power of the federal government to grow without >>restraint. At the federal level, "checks and balances" has ceased to >>include judicial review.
>>This is a startling fact, flying as it does in the face of the >>familiar conservative complaints about the Court's "activism". When it >>comes to Congress, the Court has been absolutely passive.
>>As if to compensate for its habit of capitulation to Congress, the >>Court's post-World War II "activism" has been directed entirely >>against the states, whose laws it has struck down in areas that used >>to be considered their settled and exclusive provinces.
>>Time after time, it has found "unconstitutional" laws whose legitimacy >>had stood unquestioned throughout the history of the Republic.
>>Notice how total the reversal of the Court's role has been. It began >>with the duty, according to Hamilton, of striking down new seizures of >>power by Congress. Now it finds constitutional virtually everything >>Congress chooses to do.
>>The federal government has assumed myriads of new powers nowhere >>mentioned or implied in the Constitution, yet the Court has never >>seriously impeded this expansion, or rather explosion, of novel claims >>of power. What it finds unconstitutional are the traditional powers of >>the states.
>>The postwar Court has done pioneering work in one notable area: the >>separation of church and state. I said "pioneering", not praiseworthy.
>>The Court has consistently imposed an understanding of the First >>Amendment that is not only exaggerated but unprecedented - most >>notoriously in its 1962 ruling that prayer in public schools amounts >>to an "establishment of religion".
>>This interpretation of the Establishment Clause has always been to the >>disadvantage of Christianity and of any law with roots in Christian >>morality. And it's impossible to doubt that the justices who voted for >>this interpretation were voting their predilections.
>>Maybe that's the point. I've never heard it put quite this way, but >>the Court's boldest rulings showed something less innocent than a >>series of honest mistakes.
>>Studying these cases and others of the Court's liberal heyday, one >>never gets the sense that the majority was suppressing its own >>preferences; it was clearly enacting them.
>>Those rulings can be described as wishful thinking run amok, and >>touched with more than a little arrogance. All in all, the Court >>displayed the opposite of the restrained and impartial temperament one >>expects even of a traffic-court judge, let alone a Supreme Court.
>>It's ironic to recall Hamilton's assurance that the Supreme Court >>would be "the least dangerous" of the three branches of the federal >>government.
>>But Hamilton did give us a shrewd warning about what would happen if >>the Court were ever corrupted: in Federalist No. 78, he wrote that >>"liberty can have nothing to fear from the judiciary alone, but would >>have everything to fear from its union with either of the other >>[branches]."

>>Since Franklin Roosevelt, as I've said, the judiciary has in effect >>formed a union with the other two branches to aggrandize the power of >>the federal government at the expense of the states and the people.
>>This, in outline, is the constitutional history of the United States.
>>You won't find it in the textbooks, which are required to be >>optimistic, to present degeneration as development, and to treat the >>successive pronouncements of the Supreme Court as so many oracular >>revelations of constitutional meaning.
>>A leading liberal scholar, Leonard Levy (a jew), has gone so far as to >>say that what matters is not what the Constitution says, but what the >>Court has said about the Constitution in more than 400 volumes of >>commentary.
>>This can only mean that the commentary has displaced the original >>text, and that "We the People" have been supplanted by "We the >>Lawyers."
>>We the People can't read and understand our own Constitution. We have >>to have it explained to us by the professionals. Moreover, if the >>Court enjoys oracular status, it can't really be criticized, because >>it can do no wrong.
>>We may dislike its results, but future rulings will have to be derived >>from them as precedents, rather than from the text and logic of the >>Constitution.
>>And notice that the "conservative" justices appointed by Republican >>presidents have by and large upheld not the original Constitution, but >>the most liberal interpretations of the Court itself - notably on the >>subject of abortion, which I'll return to in a minute.
>>To sum up this little constitutional history.
>>The history of the Constitution is the story of its inversion. The >>original understanding of the Constitution has been reversed.
>>The Constitution creates a presumption against any power not plainly >>delegated to the federal government and a corresponding presumption in >>favor of the rights and powers of the states and the people. But we >>now have a sloppy presumption in favor of federal power.
>>Most people assume the federal government can do anything it isn't >>plainly forbidden to do.
>>The Ninth and Tenth Amendments were adopted to make the principle of >>the Constitution as clear as possible.
>>Hamilton argued against adding a Bill of Rights, on grounds that it >>would be redundant and confusing. He thought it would seem to imply >>that the federal government had more powers than it had been given.
>>Why say, he asked, that the freedom of the press shall not be >>infringed, when the federal government would have no power by which it >>could be infringed?
>>And you can even make the case that he was exactly right. He >>understood, at any rate, that our freedom is safer if we think of the >>Constitution as a list of powers rather than as a list of rights. Be >>that as it may, the Bill of Rights was adopted, but it was designed to >>meet his objection.
>>The Ninth Amendment says: "The enumeration in the Constitution of >>certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others >>retained by the people."

>>The Tenth says: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the >>Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the >>States respectively, or to the people."
>>Now what these two provisions mean is pretty simple. The Ninth means >>that the list of the people's rights in the Constitution is not meant >>to be complete - that they still have many other rights, like the >>right to travel or to marry, which may deserve just as much respect as >>the right not to have soldiers quartered in one's home in peacetime.
>>The Tenth, on the other hand, means that the list of powers >>"delegated" to the federal government is complete - and that any other >>powers the government assumed would be, in the Framers' habitual word, >>"usurped".
>>As I said earlier, the Founders believed that our rights come from >>God, and the government's powers come from us. So the Constitution >>can't list all our rights, but it can and does list all the federal >>government's powers.
>>You can think of the Constitution as a sort of antitrust act for >>government, with the Ninth and Tenth Amendments at its core. It's >>remarkable that the same liberals who think business monopolies are >>sinister think monopolies of political power are progressive.
>>When they can't pass their programs because of the constitutional >>safeguards, they complain about "gridlock" - a clich� that shows they >>miss the whole point of the enumeration and separation of powers.
>>Well, I don't have to tell you that this way of thinking is absolutely >>alien to that of today's politicians and pundits.
>>Can you imagine John Kerry, George Bush, Al Gore, Dan Rostenkowski, or >>even Tom Brokaw having a conversation about political principles with >>any of the Founding Fathers? If you can, you must have a vivid fantasy >>life. And the result of the loss of our original political idiom has >>been, as I say, to invert the original presumptions.
>>The average American, whether he has had high-school civics or a >>degree in political science, is apt to assume that the Constitution >>somehow empowers the government to do nearly anything, while >>implicitly limiting our rights by listing them.
>>Not that anyone would say it this way, but it's as if the Bill of >>Rights had said that the enumeration of the federal government's >>powers in the Constitution is not meant to deny or disparage any other >>powers it may choose to claim, while the rights not given to the >>people in the Constitution are reserved to the federal government to >>give or withhold, and the states may be progressively stripped of >>their original powers.
>>What it comes down to is that we don't really have an operative >>Constitution anymore. The federal government defines its own powers >>day by day. It's limited not by the list of its powers in the >>Constitution, but by whatever it can get away with politically.
>>Just as the president can now send troops abroad to fight without a >>declaration of war, Congress can pass a national health care program >>without a constitutional delegation of power. The only restraint left >>is political opposition.
>>If you suspect I'm overstating the change from our original >>principles, I give you the late Justice Hugo Black. In a 1965 case >>called Griswold v. Connecticut, the Court struck down a law forbidding >>the sale of contraceptives on grounds that it violated a right of >>"privacy." (This supposed right, of course, became the basis for the >>Court's even more radical 1973 ruling in Roe v. Wade, but that's >>another story.)

>>Justice Black dissented in the Griswold case on the following ground:
>>"I like my privacy as well as the next [man]," he wrote, "but I am >>nevertheless compelled to admit that government has a right to invade >>it unless prohibited by some specific constitutional provision."
>>What a hopelessly muddled - and really sinister - misconception of the >>relation between the individual and the state: government has a right >>to invade our privacy, unless prohibited by the Constitution.
>>You don't have to share the Court's twisted view of the right of >>privacy in order to be shocked that one of its members takes this view >>of the "right" of government to invade privacy.
>>It gets crazier. In 1993 the Court handed down one of the most bizarre >>decisions of all time.
>>For two decades, enemies of legal abortion had been supporting >>Republican candidates in the hope of filling the Court with appointees >>who would review Roe v. Wade.
>>In Planned Parenthood v. Casey, the Court finally did so. But even >>with eight Republican appointees on the Court, the result was not what >>the conservatives had hoped for. The Court reaffirmed Roe.
>>Its reasoning was amazing. A plurality opinion - a majority of the >>five-justice majority in the case - admitted that the Court's previous >>ruling in Roe might be logically and historically vulnerable.
>>But it held that the paramount consideration was that the Court be >>consistent, and not appear to be yielding to public pressure, lest it >>lose the respect of the public. Therefore the Court allowed Roe to >>stand.
>>Among many things that might be said about this ruling, the most basic >>is this: The Court in effect declared itself a third party to the >>controversy, and then, setting aside the merits of the two principals' >>claims, ruled in its own interest!
>>It was as if the referee in a prizefight had declared himself the >>winner. Cynics had always suspected that the Court did not forget its >>self-interest in its decisions, but they never expected to hear it say >>so.
>>The three justices who signed that opinion evidently didn't realize >>what they were saying. A distinguished veteran Court-watcher (who >>approved of Roe, by the way) told me he had never seen anything like >>it.
>>The Court was actually telling us that it put its own welfare ahead of >>the merits of the arguments before it. In its confusion, it was >>blurting out the truth.
>>But by then, very few Americans could even remember the original >>constitutional plan. The original plan was as Madison and Tocqueville >>described it: State government was to be the rule, federal government >>the exception.
>>The states' powers were to be "numerous and indefinite", federal >>powers "few and defined." This is a matter not only of history, but of >>iron logic: the Constitution doesn't make sense when read any other >>way. As Madison asked, why bother listing particular federal powers >>unless unlisted powers are withheld?

>>The unchecked federal government has not only overflowed its banks; it >>has even created its own economy.
>>Thanks to its exercise of a myriad of unwarranted powers, it can claim >>tens of millions of dependents, at least part of whose income is due >>to the abuse of the taxing and spending powers for their benefit: >>government employees, retirees, farmers, contractors, teachers, >>artists, even soldiers.
>>Large numbers of these people are paid much more than their market >>value because the taxpayer is forced to subsidize them.
>>By the same token, most taxpayers would instantly be better off if the >>federal government simply ceased to exist - or if it suddenly returned >>to its constitutional functions.
>>Can we restore the Constitution and recover our freedom? I have no >>doubt that we can. Like all great reforms, it will take an >>intelligent, determined effort by many people. I don't want to sow >>false optimism.
>>But the time is ripe for a constitutional counterrevolution.
>>Discontent with the ruling system, as the 1992 Perot vote showed, is >>deep and widespread among several classes of people: Christians, >>conservatives, gun owners, taxpayers, and simple believers in honest >>government all have their reasons. The rulers lack legitimacy and >>don't believe in their own power strongly enough to defend it.
>>The beauty of it is that the people don't have to invent a new system >>of government in order to get rid of this one. They only have to >>restore the one described in the Constitution - the system our >>government already professes to be upholding. Taken seriously, the >>Constitution would pose a serious threat to our form of government.
>>And for just that reason, the ruling parties will be finished as soon >>as the American people rediscover and awaken their dormant >>Constitution.

Indeed, it is reasonable to believe that said extremists would consider their moderate brethren to be infidels worthy of the same fate, should they actively condemn their actions.

Actually, except for the stoning part (which I don't know about as yet), that's pretty much the way women live in Iraq now. Before, they were about as equal to males as the ones here in Korea have become in the past 20 years.  I was very disappointed to hear that the new Iraqi government had set back women's rights there 500 years.. :(

I agree, and it's the disingenuous claim to "objectivity" that transforms liberal journalism from something one just has to live with to something annoying.  I would find the overwrought bleating about Fox News far less hypocritical if it didn't come mostly from quarters that are completely silent about the biases of NPR, CNN, the BBC,  the New York Times, and other organs of conventional liberalism.

Now, of course, there's wicked (i.e., non-liberal) Fox, and suddenly objectivity is a big issue.

I don't like scrolling down through repetitive "crap" when I'm reading a NG, but I will bottom post a reference in case someone is just tuning in.

But thanks for answering my question.  The GE Super Radios I was familiar with did not have this feature.  I'm one of the dummies.

The whole episode sure looks like Nazi style atrocities by the Russians.
Just like the 3000 Polish officers they killed during the war and blamed on the Germans. They hid that for fifty years.

The Russian lovers on this group will be by shortly to explain WHY ethnic cleansing and genocide are good. They also LOVE Ashcroft, Perle and Wolfowitz. Note the absence of these war mongering luminaries since the War on Iraq started going so badly. Cockroaches hate light too.

Another concept that totally indicts the competency about MANY of those who complain about Fox is that the complainers tend to have little ability to distinguish between editorial bias and news bias.  With Fox, one would notice that the NEWS information is relatively unbiased in the sense that it isn't as biased as the anti-Fox forces bleat.  Fox certainly has plenty of BIASED commentators, however.  Where Fox appears to try to maintain a REASONABLE, but imperfect, balance of left and right wing guests on any given show, and the purely political shows like Hannity and Colmes does try to maintain balance -- it is very clear that CNN tends to leave the right wing side of the equation relatively weak.

The NEWS shows should be relatively balanced (as Fox does a tolerable job of presenting the NEWS), while the commentary shows shouldn't be presented in misleadingly pure news-reader format (for example, Dan Rather's program seems to have strong opinion/editorial bias, but is misleadingly sold as a news show.) O'Reilly is a commentator/opinion show -- O'Reilly doesn't have the same kind of obvious newsreader format as Dan Rather... Yet, you'll find that Dan is quite biased, but he shouldnt' be, because he is supposed to be the 'CBS Evening News', not 'opinions of the Executive Producer, Dan Rather.' On the other hand, the 'OReilly Factor' is obviously a show that has something to do with OReilly's opinions.

The extreme-leftists (or overly sensitive leftists) are obviously offended by the presentation of right wing opinion on Fox News. However, there is certainly some fairly serious left wing opinion on Fox also. Geesh, on CNN, they have a couple of ACTIVE political operatives for one of the presidential candidates as leftist commentators!!! The right wing CNN commentators are much less prominent than the CURRENTLY ACTIVE lefties.

It would be nice if Fox wasn't the predominant television source of news that presents both right and left wing opinion and also tends to be willing to present news that can be favorable and unfavorable to both the left and right wing. On the other hand, it is very a common pattern for the 'CBS Evening News according to Dan Rather' and other leftist emphasizing to news/opinion shows 'forget' to present info that is favorable to the right wing, and in SOME cases even present opinion as if it is news!!!

John

I am most offended by those who impart a holier than thou attitude in a hard-news newsreader format, yet are still more biased than they should be. I agree that there is always some kind of bias, but too many of those who are especially biased and 'impure' tend to present themselves as some kind of 'pure' lofty elite. The 'sad' thing is that the 'gritty' Fox hard news shows (e.g. Fox Report) seem perhaps even more even handed than the so-called elite Dan Rather or Peter Jennings obvious Democrat/leftist operatives.

When people complain about 'Fox', they seem to try to confuse/confound the O'Reilly or Hannity/Colmes shows as 'hard news' and forget that the true news shows on Fox (e.g. Cavuto or Fox Report) tend to be much more even handed than the so-called hard news represented by "world according to 'whats the frequency' proven democrat supporter Dan Rather" or "world according to 'leftist Canadian' Peter Jennings." Frankly, Peter did finally choose to become an American citizen, but considering the benefits that he has gained from the US, he should certainly be a little more pro-American than his VERY CLEAR pro-Palestinian (over and above the US) bias.

This is off topic, but I'm going to ask it anyway...

I'm don't have a lot of technical expertise and I'm wondering how one determines what kind of coax to use as a feedline. I currently have about 50 feet of fairly thin (RG174) coax that I'm using to feed an outdoor active antenna that's mounted on the fire escape outside my window. I'm thinking about mounting the antenna on the roof of my apartment building and suspect 50 ft of feed line might just be enough to allow me to do that. However, a friend of mine told me that 50 ft of RG174 is going to allow too much signal loss. So, there you have my first question: Is 50 ft of RG174 coax a bad feedline?

The second question is this. My friend seemed to think that the 50 ft run to my roof would result in greater signal loss than the much shorter run to my fire escape, even though we're talking about 50 ft of coax either way. This didn't make sense to me. 50 ft of coax is 50 ft of coax, it seems to me, whether it's coiled and leading just outside my window or straight and leading all the way up to the roof. Am I wrong about this?

Hiya.....

For about a year, I have been considering buying a new tabletop sw rig.  I currently use the R-75, and I was thinking of getting a DSP radio.  After reading some receiver comparison reviews of radios like the NRD-545 and getting other advice from people on this ng, I became more and more interested in the IC-746Pro. It seems to be an amazing DSP DX'ing rig.  I also know about the reported problems with the transmitter, but I'm not so worried about that.  It can be fixed.

Up until now, I have not been interested in transmitting as an amateur. Just sw listening.  I figure, if I am going to get an IC-746Pro, I might as well look into getting a ham license.  It might be fun....

I read a few links about the multiple choice tests for the tech license and I also saw a list of pool.  My question is... How much of an ordeal is it to get set up to take the test itself ???

Hi Steve, lol at the [OT] comment, I suppose that's true sometimes..

Since we are a shortwave group, at those frequencies 50' of anything will be fine with little if any noticeable difference between feedline choices. Shortwave listening requires the best signal to noise ratio, with little effect from minor attenuation of cable loss. Scanner listening, especially above 225mhz, requires maximum signal possible, with little if any concern for SNR. Height of the antenna is important to both shortwave and scanner frequency listening, so your friend is wrong about the loss v. height issue. The principle of diminishing returns applies to heights over 100' unless you can afford heavy hardline for scanner frequencies.

The Tech license study will take the average person about 2-4 weeks to get through, depending on how much time you have. It is not a difficult test, even if one isn't really technically inclined. The Tech study manual covers mostly basic material, and you won't need more than middle-school math abilities to do the calculations required in the exam.

However, you won't be able to transmit on the SW bands until you upgrade to the General class. That's another whole study guide and test. The General Class study guide covers much of the same stuff the Technician guide does, but in more depth, and there is more about RF exposure and antennas. You also need to pass a 5 words per minute Morse Code receiving exam for the General license. Many people expect the Morse Code exam to be dropped in the near future, but I wouldn't hold my breath waiting for the FCC to approve its demise. Some people have taken both the Technician and General licenses at once. Each of these tests consists of 35 questions, and the test is multiple choice. And the 5 wpm Morse Code test is really pretty easy to pass too.

There are good practice exams at the following websites: www.eham.net and www.qrz.com.

The best study guides (IMHO) are the ARRL manuals. The Tech study guide is the Now You're Talking! 5th edition, which contains lessons and the current test question and answer pools. The General Class Manual is also available from ARRL, as are Morse Code practice CDs and tapes. Their website is here: www.arrl.org/catalog.

Good luck!

Jackie

You lost me with the first few. I noticed that they were strictly anti-Israeli. Not that I'm pro-Israel, because I'm not. But you never hear of Jews strapping bombs to their chests and then climbing onto buses carrying children to school as the Palestinians have. But then I saw that one of your links was critical of both Palestinians and Israelis, and I thought "Okay...I misjudged the list, perhaps." The way I see it, if both sides are screwing up, then be critical of both sides.

But then I skipped to this bottom link, and I now see that I have to face the facts as they are.

> http://www.hoffman-info.com/images/bush_sharon_yassin_1.jpg

Do you know who Mike Hoffman even is? And do you even have a clue as to what that photograph is referencing? I imagine you do, but it's just so damning to your position that I have a hard time believing that you'd be willing to link to it. Since I'm sure not everyone here got it, I'll clear it up. It's referring to wheelchair-bound Islamic cleric Ahmed Ismail Yassin, who founded Hamas...which is an -Islamist terrorist organization-.  If ever someone needed to suck on a rocket from a Israeli gunship, it was him; and that's exactly what he did earlier this year. He -needed- to die. (He'd been in the chair since he was a kid, IIRC, so forget playing the poor crippled old man card, Mike.) I'd have been delighted to have capped this bastard myself. The world is a better place now that he's dead. But you seem to decry his killing by posting a link to that picture, which is really just an attempt by an anti-semitic holocaust denier to make the Israelis look bad. The photo had -nothing- to do with killing kids. Oh, except for the fact that Yassin, as the leader of Hamas, was responsible for -killing kids-. If you had a point, it's overshadowed by your link to that picture, as if the joke was in bad taste, or his killing was an evil act.

Just how did you find that picture, Mike? Do you spend a lot of time at sites like that?

Over the last couple of days, I've kept getting this sense that you weren't feeling as harshly towards the Chechnyan terrorists as I thought any civilized human being ought to. Now I'm -really- starting to wonder.

I'd like you to meet my new friend, Leroy. You guys'll get along famously. Or rather, infamously.

There is some evidence that the Russians did a spin on the 'war on terror' as a way around the whole ethnic cleansing thing, hold down the minorities question: 'these aren't minorities trying to gain rights and self rule, but terrorists that must be liquidated'.  Applies at least to Chechnya, South Ocettia, Abkhazia, Nagorno-Karabakh.  I don't hear about any of this on SW anymore. Used to.

A friend who was at the Kumtor mine in Kyrgyzstan (a gold mine, a long way west, a joint US-Kyrgyz-Russian enterprise from what I understand, with lots of Canadian miners) said he could hear non-gov't Russian language broadcasts from Georgia protesting the use of Russian troops in Georgia and Armenia, but nothing in the past couple of years. He also talked of North Koreans being in Kyrgyzstan. He thought the NK's were sending prisoners there to work as a way of paying off North Korea's debts to Russia.

Michael,

Just in case you are not aware of these articles about using the IC-746Pro as a SWL DXing rig, check out these informative piece:

http://www.kongsfjord.no  Look under "The Dallas Files" and you'll see the IC-746Pro review.

http://www.dxing.info/equipment/icom_ic746_mjelde.pdf   This one is a follow-up to the above article.

I'd prefer a thicker coax for physical strength, but the loss on 50 feet isn't going to be meaningful, particularly since the signal will be amplified before it hits the coax.

I've got about 350 feet of a Belden variation of RG58 on my primary antenna, and it's fine even when I switch out the remote amp.

Putting your antenna on the roof should help get it away from electrical noise - even if you had to switch to 100 feet of coax, it would probably be a very good thing.

The down side is putting it on the roof also makes it more likely to get damaged by lightning.

Yes, but the extremists are vastly outnumbered by the moderates. The latter must take a stand against the former if Islamic terrorism is to be quenched.

I currently have about 50 feet of fairly thin (RG174) coax that I'm using to feed an outdoor active antenna that's mounted on the fire escape outside my window. I'm thinking about mounting the antenna on the roof of my apartment building and suspect 50 ft of feed line might just be enough to allow me to do that. However, a friend of mine told me that 50 ft of RG174 is going to allow too much signal loss. So, there you have my first question: Is 50 ft of RG174 coax a bad feedline?
> The second question is this. My friend seemed to think that the 50 ft run to my roof would result in greater signal loss than the much shorter run to my fire escape, even though we're talking about 50 ft of coax either way. This didn't make sense to me. 50 ft of coax is 50 ft of coax, it seems to me, whether it's coiled and leading just outside my window or straight and leading all the way up to the roof. Am I wrong about this?

Get some R-59U coax (Radio Shack) which is intended for TV satellite dish systems. It has better shielding than most other coax that you can easily buy. The R-59U is 75-ohms instead of 50-ohms but that's not a significant mismatch for receiving. I'm using 100-ft of R-59U with no noticable signal loss. Check out the following website for the antenna system I use.

It's all about money. In many cases Republicans get elected because they have more campaign money from rich contributors. Bush currently has at least twice as much as Kerry. That's one of the reasons the Republican party is called the party of the rich. Democrats are not known for being rich, which is one of the reasons they're Democrats. They see the Democratic party as representing them better than the Republicans. I watched the RNC for almost a half hour on the first day before I saw a black delegate.

Good comeback Drakeman.
The second link just reiterated what Telemon posted.  It also asserted that Kerry doesn't know how to handle a firearm.  Let's get real.  Anyone who served in the military knows how to handle a firearm.  But I did put on my rubber gloves, held my nose, and went to the Drudge link (what a friggin skank!).  And, sure enough, it is (apparently) true.  That shotgun Kerry received technically has a pistol grip.  Who woulda thunk?  Not me.  Looks like a sloppy mistake on Kerry's part.  I know there was a lot of talk about banning "Street Sweeper" type shotguns that had a pistol grip (there I go again!) with no stock and a high capacity magazine, useful when drug deals go bad but not much of a sportsman's firearm.  Kerry prob thought that's what he was legislating against.  I really, seriously, don't believe Kerry wanted to ban all smemi-auto shotguns.

It's like the popular myth that he wanted to stop development of the Apache helicopter.  He did speak about that in an interview but never sponsored or backed legislation to do so, unlike Dick Cheney.

The Russians have  been doing it for over two hundred years. That encourages revenge and the cycle of death begins..Not knowing that would mean you are Israeli or American.

Not necessarily. It would appear that Kerry is kind of a klutz. He did apparently wound himself several times.

I've had the pleasure of meeting many officers who didn't know jack shit about much of anything at all.

Well, you did mention 'sloppy mistake'... I think that defines Kerry fairly well.

I think it's WAY too late to reverse the direction we're heading, and there's a lot more that can be said here, but it's important for you to know the facts before you lose what you had.

Please ... read on.

How Tyranny Came to America

One of the great goals of education is to initiate the young into the conversation of their ancestors; to enable them to understand the language of that conversation, in all its subtlety, and maybe even, in their maturity, to add to it some wisdom of their own.

The modern American educational system no longer teaches us the political language of our ancestors. In fact our schooling helps widen the gulf of time between our ancestors and ourselves, because much of what we are taught in the name of civics, political science, or American history is really modern liberal propaganda.

Sometimes this is deliberate. Worse yet, sometimes it isn't. Our ancestral voices have come to sound alien to us, and therefore our own moral and political language is impoverished. It's as if the people of England could no longer understand Shakespeare, or Germans couldn't comprehend Mozart and Beethoven.

So to most Americans, even those who feel oppressed by what they call big government,�it must sound strange to hear it said, in the past tense, that tyranny "came" to America. After all, we have a constitution, don't we?

We've abolished slavery and segregation. We won two world wars and the Cold War. We still congratulate ourselves before every ballgame on being the Land of the Free. And we aren't ruled by some fanatic with a funny mustache who likes big parades with thousands of soldiers goose-stepping past huge pictures of himself.

For all that, we no longer fully have what our ancestors, who framed and ratified our Constitution, thought of as freedom � a careful division of power that prevents power from becoming concentrated and unlimited.

The word they usually used for concentrated power was consolidated�� a rough synonym for fascist. And the words they used for any excessive powers claimed or exercised by the state were usurped�and tyrannical.

They would consider the modern "liberal" state tyrannical in principle; they would see in it not the opposite of the fascist, communist, and socialist states, but their sister.

If Washington and Jefferson, Madison, and Hamilton could come back, the first thing they'd notice would be that the federal government now routinely assumes thousands of powers never assigned to it � powers never granted, never delegated,�never enumerated.

These were the words they used, and it's a good idea for us to learn their language.

They would say that we no longer live under the Constitution they wrote. And the Americans of a much later era � the period from Cleveland to Coolidge, for example � would say we no longer live even under the Constitution they inherited and amended.

I call the present system "Post�Constitutional America." As I sometimes put it, the U.S. Constitution poses no serious threat to our form of government.

What's worse is that our constitutional illiteracy cuts us off from our own national heritage. And so our politics degenerates into increasingly bitter and unprincipled quarrels about who is going to bear the burdens of war and welfare.

I don't want to sound like an oracle on this subject. As a typical victim of modern public education and a disinformed citizen of this media-ridden country, I took a long time � an embarrassingly long time � to learn what I'm passing on.

It was like studying geometry in old age, and discovering how simple the basic principles of space really are. It was the old story: In order to learn, first I had to unlearn.

Most of what I'd been taught and told about the Constitution was misguided or even false. And I'd never been told some of the most elementary things, which would have saved me a tremendous amount of confusion.

The Constitution does two things.

First, it delegates certain enumerated powers to the federal government. Second, it separates those powers among the three branches.

Most people understand the secondary principle of the separation of powers. But they don't grasp the primary idea of delegated and enumerated powers.

Consider this. We have recently had a big national debate over national health care. Advocates and opponents argued long and loud over whether it could work, what was fair, how to pay for it, and so forth.

But almost nobody raised the basic issue: Where does the federal government get the power to legislate in this area? The answer is: NOWHERE.

The Constitution lists 18 specific legislative powers of Congress, and not a one of them covers national health care.

As a matter of fact, none of the delegated powers of Congress � and delegated�is always the key word � covers Social Security, or Medicaid, or Medicare, or federal aid to education, or most of what are now miscalled "civil rights," or countless public works projects, or equally countless regulations of business, large and small, or the space program, or farm subsidies, or research grants, or subsidies to the arts and humanities, or ... well, you name it, chances are, it's unconstitutional.

Even the most cynical opponents of the Constitution would be dumbfounded to learn that the federal government now tells us where we can smoke. We are less free, more heavily taxed, and worse governed than our ancestors under British rule. Sometimes this government makes me wonder: Was George III really all that bad?

Let's be clear about one thing.

Constitutional�and unconstitutional�aren't just simple terms of approval and disapproval. A bad law may be perfectly constitutional. A wise and humane law may be unconstitutional. But what is almost certainly bad is a constant disposition to thwart or disregard the Constitution.

It's not just a matter of what is sometimes called the "original intent" of the authors of the Constitution. What really matters is the common, explicit, unchallenged understanding of the Constitution, on all sides, over several generations. There was no mystery about it.

The logic of the Constitution was so elegantly simple that a foreign observer could explain it to his countrymen in two sentences.

Alexis de Tocqueville wrote that "the attributes of the federal government were carefully defined [in the Constitution], and all that was not included among them was declared to remain to the governments of the individual states. Thus the government of the states remained the rule, and that of the federal government the exception".

The Declaration of Independence, which underlies the Constitution, holds that the rights of the people come from God, and that the powers of the government come from the people.

Let me repeat that: According to the Declaration of Independence, the rights of the people come from God, and the powers of the government come from the people. Unless you grasp this basic order of things, you'll have a hard time understanding the Constitution.

The Constitution was the instrument by which the American people granted, or delegated, certain specific powers to the federal government. Any power not delegated was withheld, or "reserved".

As we'll see later, these principles are expressed particularly in the Ninth and Tenth Amendments, two crucial but neglected provisions of the Constitution. Let me say it yet again: The rights of the people come from God. The powers of government come from the people.

The American people delegated the specific powers they wanted the federal government to have through the Constitution. Any additional powers they wanted to grant were supposed to be added by amendment.

It's largely because we've forgotten these simple principles that the country is in so much trouble. The powers of the federal government have multiplied madly, with only the vaguest justifications and on the most slippery pretexts.

Its chief business now is not defending our rights but taking and redistributing our wealth. It has even created its own economy, the tax economy, which is parasitical on the basic and productive voluntary economy.

Even much of what passes for "national defense" is a kind of hidden entitlement program, as was illustrated when President George Bush warned some states during the 1992 campaign that Bill Clinton would destroy jobs by closing down military bases.

Well, if those bases aren't necessary for our defense, they should be closed down.

Now of course nobody in American politics, not even the most fanatical liberal, will admit openly that he doesn't care what the Constitution says and isn't going to let it interfere with his agenda.

Everyone professes to respect it � even the Supreme Court. That's the problem. The U.S. Constitution serves the same function as the British royal family: it offers a comforting symbol of tradition and continuity, thereby masking a radical change in the actual system of power.

So the people who mean to do without the Constitution have come up with a slogan to keep up appearances: they say the Constitution is a "living document", which sounds like a compliment.

They say it has "evolved" in response to "changing circumstances," etc. They sneer at the idea that such a mystic document could still have the same meanings it had two centuries ago, or even, I guess, sixty years ago, just before the evolutionary process started accelerating with fantastic velocity.

These people, who tend with suspicious consistency to be liberals, have discovered that the Constitution, whatever it may have meant in the past, now means � again, with suspicious consistency � whatever suits their present convenience.

Do liberals want big federal entitlement programs? Lo, the Interstate Commerce Clause turns out to mean that the big federal programs are constitutional!

Do liberals oppose capital punishment? Lo, the ban on "cruel and unusual punishment" turns out to mean that capital punishment is unconstitutional!

Do liberals want abortion on demand? Lo, the Ninth and Fourteenth Amendments, plus their emanations and penumbras, turn out to mean that abortion is nothing less than a woman's constitutional right!

Can all this be blind evolution? If liberals were more religious, they might suspect the hand of Providence behind it! This marvelous "living document" never seems to impede the liberal agenda in any way.

On the contrary: it always seems to demand, by a wonderful coincidence, just what liberals are prescribing on other grounds.

Take abortion. Set aside your own views and feelings about it. Is it really possible that, as the Supreme Court in effect said, all the abortion laws of all 50 states � no matter how restrictive, no matter how permissive � had always been unconstitutional?

Not only that, but no previous Court, no justice on any Court in all our history � not Marshall, not Story, not Taney, not Holmes, not Hughes, not Frankfurter, not even Warren � had ever been recorded as doubting the constitutionality of those laws. Everyone had always taken it for granted that the states had every right to enact them.

Are we supposed to believe, in all seriousness, that the Court's ruling in Roe v. Wade�was a response to the text of the Constitution, the discernment of a meaning that had eluded all its predecessors, rather than an enactment of the current liberal agenda? Come now.

And notice that the parts of this "living document" don't develop equally or consistently. The Court has expanded the meaning of some of liberalism's pet rights, such as freedom of speech, to absurd lengths; but it has neglected or even contracted other rights, such as property rights, which liberalism is hostile to.

In order to appreciate what has happened, you have to stand back from all the details and look at the outline. What follows is a thumbnail history of the Constitution.

In the beginning the states were independent and sovereign. That is why they were called "states": a state was not yet thought of as a mere subdivision of a larger unit, as is the case now.

The universal understanding was that in ratifying the Constitution, the 13 states yielded a very little of their sovereignty, but kept most of it.

Those who were reluctant to ratify generally didn't object to the powers the Constitution delegated to the federal government. But they were suspicious: they wanted assurance that if those few powers were granted, other powers, never granted, wouldn't be seized too.

In The Federalist,�Hamilton and Madison argued at some length that under the proposed distribution of power the federal government would never be able to "usurp", as they put it, those other powers.

Madison wrote soothingly in Federalist No. 45 that the powers of the federal government would be "few and defined," relating mostly to war and foreign policy, while those remaining with the states would be "numerous and indefinite", and would have to do with the everyday domestic life of the country.

The word usurpation�occurs numberless times in the ratification debates, reflecting the chief anxiety the champions of the Constitution had to allay. And as a final assurance, the Tenth Amendment stipulated that the powers not "delegated" to the federal government were "reserved" to the separate states and to the people.

But this wasn't enough to satisfy everyone.

Well-grounded fears persisted. And during the first half of the nineteenth century, nearly every president, in his inaugural message, felt it appropriate to renew the promise that the powers of the federal government would not be exceeded, nor the reserved powers of the states transgressed.

The federal government was to remain truly federal, with only a few specified powers, rather than "consolidated" with unlimited powers.

The Civil War, or the War Between the States if you like, resulted from the suspicion that the North meant to use the power of the Union to destroy the sovereignty of the Southern states.

Whether or not that suspicion was justified, the war itself produced that very result. The South was subjugated and occupied like a conquered country. Its institutions were profoundly remade by the federal government; the United States of America was taking on the character of an extensive, and highly centralized, empire.

Similar processes were under way in Europe, as small states were consolidated into large ones, setting the stage for the tyrannies and gigantic wars of the twentieth century.

Even so, the three constitutional amendments ratified after the war contain a significant clause: "Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation".

Why is this significant? Because it shows that even the conquerors still understood that a new power of Congress required a constitutional amendment. It couldn't just be taken by majority vote, as it would be today.

If the Congress then had wanted a national health plan, it would have begun by asking the people for an amendment to the Constitution authorizing it to legislate in the area of health care.

The immediate purpose of the Fourteenth Amendment was to provide a constitutional basis for a proposed civil rights act. But the Supreme Court soon found other uses for the Fourteenth Amendment. It began striking down state laws as unconstitutional.

This was an important new twist in American constitutional law. Hamilton, in arguing for judicial review in Federalist No. 78, had envisioned the Court as a check on Congress, resisting the illicit consolidation or centralization of power.

And our civics books still describe the function of checks and balances in terms of the three branches of the federal government mutually controlling each other.

But in fact, the Court was now countermanding the state legislatures, where the principle of checks and balances had no meaning, since those state legislatures had no reciprocal control on the Court. This development eventually set the stage for the convulsive Supreme Court rulings of the late twentieth century, from Brown v. Board of Education�to Roe v. Wade.

The big thing to recognize here is that the Court had become the very opposite of the institution Hamilton and others had had in mind. Instead of blocking the centralization of power in the federal government, the Court was assisting it.

The original point of the federal system was that the federal government would have very little to say about the internal affairs of the states. But the result of the Civil War was that the federal government had a great deal to say about those affairs � in Northern as well as Southern states.

Note that this trend toward centralization was occurring largely under Republican presidents.

The Democrat Grover Cleveland was one of the last great spokesmen for federalism. He once vetoed a modest $10,000 federal grant for drought relief on grounds that there was no constitutional power to do it.

If that sounds archaic, remember that the federal principle remained strong long enough that during the 1950s, the federal highway program had to be called a "defense" measure in order to win approval, and federal loans to college students in the 1960s were absurdly called "defense" loans for the same reason.

The Tenth Amendment is a refined taste, but it has always had a few devotees. But federalism suffered some serious wounds during the presidency of Woodrow Wilson.

First came the income tax, its constitutionality established by the Sixteenth Amendment; this meant that every U.S. citizen was now, for the first time, directly accountable to the federal government.

Then the Seventeenth Amendment required that senators be elected by popular vote rather than chosen by state legislators; this meant that the states no longer had their own representation in Congress, so that they now lost their remaining control over the federal government.

The Eighteenth Amendment, establishing Prohibition, gave the federal government even greater powers over the country's internal affairs.

All these amendments were ominous signs that federalism was losing its traditional place in the hearts, and perhaps the minds, of Americans.

But again, notice that these expansions of federal power were at least achieved by amending the Constitution, as the Constitution itself requires. The Constitution doesn't claim to be a "living document". It is written on paper, not rubber.

In fact, the radicals of the early twentieth century despaired of achieving socialism or communism as long as the Constitution remained. They regarded it as the critical obstacle to their plans, and thought a revolution would be necessary to remove it. As The New Republic wrote: "To have a socialist society we must have a new Constitution." That's laying it on the line!

Unfortunately, the next generation of collectivists would be less candid in their contempt for the federal system. Once they learned to feign devotion to the Constitution they secretly regarded as obsolete, the laborious formality of amendment would no longer be necessary. They could merely pretend that the Constitution was on their side.

After Franklin Roosevelt restaffed the Supreme Court with his compliant cronies, the federal government would be free to make up its own powers as it went along, thanks to the notion that the Constitution was a malleable "living document" whose central meaning could be changed, and even reversed, by ingenious interpretation.

Roosevelt's New Deal brought fascist-style central planning to America � what some call the "mixed economy" but Hilaire Belloc called the Servile State�� and his highhanded approach to governance soon led to conflict with the Court, which found several of his chief measures unconstitutional.

Early in his second term, Roosevelt retaliated by trying to "pack" the Court by increasing the number of seats. This power play alienated even many of his allies, but it turned out not to be necessary.

After 1937, the Court began seeing things Roosevelt's way. It voted as he wished; several members obligingly retired; and soon he had appointed a majority of the justices. The country virtually got a new Constitution.

Roosevelt's Court soon decided that the Tenth Amendment was a "truism" of no real force. This meant that almost any federal act was ipso facto constitutional, and the powers "reserved" to the states and the people were just leftovers the federal government didn't want, like the meal left for the jackals by the satisfied lion.

There was almost no limit, now, on what the federal government could do. In effect, the powers of the federal government no longer had to come from the people by constitutional delegation: they could be created by simple political power.

Roosevelt also set the baneful precedent of using entitlement programs, such as Social Security, to buy some people's votes with other people's money. It was both a fatal corruption of democracy and the realization of the Servile State in America. The class of voting parasites has been swelling ever since.

So the New Deal didn't just expand the power of the federal government; that had been done before. The New Deal did much deeper mischief: it struck at the whole principle of constitutional resistance to federal expansion.

Congress didn't need any constitutional amendment to increase its powers; it could increase its own powers ad hoc, at any time, by simple majority vote. All this, of course, would have seemed monstrous to our ancestors.

Even Alexander Hamilton, who favored a relatively strong central government in his time, never dreamed of a government so powerful.

The Court suffered a bloody defeat at Roosevelt's hands, and since his time it has never found a major act of Congress unconstitutional.

This has allowed the power of the federal government to grow without restraint. At the federal level, "checks and balances" has ceased to include judicial review.

This is a startling fact, flying as it does in the face of the familiar conservative complaints about the Court's "activism". When it comes to Congress, the Court has been absolutely passive.

As if to compensate for its habit of capitulation to Congress, the Court's post-World War II "activism" has been directed entirely against the states, whose laws it has struck down in areas that used to be considered their settled and exclusive provinces.

Time after time, it has found "unconstitutional" laws whose legitimacy had stood unquestioned throughout the history of the Republic.

Notice how total the reversal of the Court's role has been. It began with the duty, according to Hamilton, of striking down new seizures of power by Congress. Now it finds constitutional virtually everything Congress chooses to do.

The federal government has assumed myriads of new powers nowhere mentioned or implied in the Constitution, yet the Court has never seriously impeded this expansion, or rather explosion, of novel claims of power. What it finds unconstitutional are the traditional powers of the states.

The postwar Court has done pioneering work in one notable area: the separation of church and state. I said "pioneering", not praiseworthy.

The Court has consistently imposed an understanding of the First Amendment that is not only exaggerated but unprecedented � most notoriously in its 1962 ruling that prayer in public schools amounts to an "establishment of religion".

This interpretation of the Establishment Clause has always been to the disadvantage of Christianity and of any law with roots in Christian morality. And it's impossible to doubt that the justices who voted for this interpretation were voting their predilections.

Maybe that's the point. I've never heard it put quite this way, but the Court's boldest rulings showed something less innocent than a series of honest mistakes.

Studying these cases and others of the Court's liberal heyday, one never gets the sense that the majority was suppressing its own preferences; it was clearly enacting them.

Those rulings can be described as wishful thinking run amok, and touched with more than a little arrogance. All in all, the Court displayed the opposite of the restrained and impartial temperament one expects even of a traffic-court judge, let alone a Supreme Court.

It's ironic to recall Hamilton's assurance that the Supreme Court would be "the least dangerous" of the three branches of the federal government.

But Hamilton did give us a shrewd warning about what would happen if the Court were ever corrupted: in Federalist No. 78, he wrote that "liberty can have nothing to fear from the judiciary alone, but would have everything to fear from its union with either of the other [branches]."

Since Franklin Roosevelt, as I've said, the judiciary has in effect formed a union with the other two branches to aggrandize the power of the federal government at the expense of the states and the people.

This, in outline, is the constitutional history of the United States.

You won't find it in the textbooks, which are required to be optimistic, to present degeneration as development, and to treat the successive pronouncements of the Supreme Court as so many oracular revelations of constitutional meaning.

A leading liberal scholar, Leonard Levy (a jew), has gone so far as to say that what matters is not what the Constitution says, but what the Court has said about the Constitution in more than 400 volumes of commentary.

This can only mean that the commentary has displaced the original text, and that "We the People" have been supplanted by "We the Lawyers."

We the People can't read and understand our own Constitution. We have to have it explained to us by the professionals. Moreover, if the Court enjoys oracular status, it can't really be criticized, because it can do no wrong.

We may dislike its results, but future rulings will have to be derived from them as precedents, rather than from the text and logic of the Constitution.

And notice that the "conservative" justices appointed by Republican presidents have by and large upheld not the original Constitution, but the most liberal interpretations of the Court itself � notably on the subject of abortion, which I'll return to in a minute.

To sum up this little constitutional history.

The history of the Constitution is the story of its inversion. The original understanding of the Constitution has been reversed.

The Constitution creates a presumption against any power not plainly delegated to the federal government and a corresponding presumption in favor of the rights and powers of the states and the people. But we now have a sloppy presumption in favor of federal power.

Most people assume the federal government can do anything it isn't plainly forbidden to do.

The Ninth and Tenth Amendments were adopted to make the principle of the Constitution as clear as possible.

Hamilton argued against adding a Bill of Rights, on grounds that it would be redundant and confusing. He thought it would seem to imply that the federal government had more powers than it had been given. Why say, he asked, that the freedom of the press shall not be infringed, when the federal government would have no power by which it could be infringed?

And you can even make the case that he was exactly right. He understood, at any rate, that our freedom is safer if we think of the Constitution as a list of powers rather than as a list of rights. Be that as it may, the Bill of Rights was adopted, but it was designed to meet his objection.

The Ninth Amendment says: "The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people."

The Tenth says: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Now what these two provisions mean is pretty simple. The Ninth means that the list of the people's rights in the Constitution is not meant to be complete � that they still have many other rights, like the right to travel or to marry, which may deserve just as much respect as the right not to have soldiers quartered in one's home in peacetime.

The Tenth, on the other hand, means that the list of powers "delegated" to the federal government is complete � and that any other powers the government assumed would be, in the Framers' habitual word, "usurped".

As I said earlier, the Founders believed that our rights come from God, and the government's powers come from us. So the Constitution can't list all our rights, but it can and does list all the federal government's powers.

You can think of the Constitution as a sort of antitrust act for government, with the Ninth and Tenth Amendments at its core. It's remarkable that the same liberals who think business monopolies are sinister think monopolies of political power are progressive.

When they can't pass their programs because of the constitutional safeguards, they complain about "gridlock" � a clich� that shows they miss the whole point of the enumeration and separation of powers.

Well, I don't have to tell you that this way of thinking is absolutely alien to that of today's politicians and pundits.

Can you imagine John Kerry, George Bush, Al Gore, Dan Rostenkowski, or even Tom Brokaw having a conversation about political principles with any of the Founding Fathers? If you can, you must have a vivid fantasy life. And the result of the loss of our original political idiom has been, as I say, to invert the original presumptions.

The average American, whether he has had high-school civics or a degree in political science, is apt to assume that the Constitution somehow empowers the government to do nearly anything, while implicitly limiting our rights by listing them.

Not that anyone would say it this way, but it's as if the Bill of Rights had said that the enumeration of the federal government's powers in the Constitution is not meant to deny or disparage any other powers it may choose to claim, while the rights not given to the people in the Constitution are reserved to the federal government to give or withhold, and the states may be progressively stripped of their original powers.

What it comes down to is that we don't really have an operative Constitution anymore. The federal government defines its own powers day by day. It's limited not by the list of its powers in the Constitution, but by whatever it can get away with politically.

Just as the president can now send troops abroad to fight without a declaration of war, Congress can pass a national health care program without a constitutional delegation of power. The only restraint left is political opposition.

If you suspect I'm overstating the change from our original principles, I give you the late Justice Hugo Black. In a 1965 case called Griswold v. Connecticut, the Court struck down a law forbidding the sale of contraceptives on grounds that it violated a right of "privacy." (This supposed right, of course, became the basis for the Court's even more radical 1973 ruling in Roe v. Wade,�but that's another story.)

Justice Black dissented in the Griswold�case on the following ground: "I like my privacy as well as the next [man]," he wrote, "but I am nevertheless compelled to admit that government has a right to invade it unless prohibited by some specific constitutional provision."

What a hopelessly muddled � and really sinister � misconception of the relation between the individual and the state: government has a right to invade our privacy, unless prohibited by the Constitution.

You don't have to share the Court's twisted view of the right of privacy in order to be shocked that one of its members takes this view of the "right" of government to invade privacy.

It gets crazier. In 1993 the Court handed down one of the most bizarre decisions of all time.

For two decades, enemies of legal abortion had been supporting Republican candidates in the hope of filling the Court with appointees who would review Roe v. Wade.

In Planned Parenthood v. Casey,�the Court finally did so. But even with eight Republican appointees on the Court, the result was not what the conservatives had hoped for. The Court reaffirmed Roe.

Its reasoning was amazing. A plurality opinion � a majority of the five-justice majority in the case � admitted that the Court's previous ruling in Roe�might be logically and historically vulnerable.

But it held that the paramount consideration was that the Court be consistent, and not appear to be yielding to public pressure, lest it lose the respect of the public. Therefore the Court allowed Roe�to stand.

Among many things that might be said about this ruling, the most basic is this: The Court in effect declared itself a third party to the controversy, and then, setting aside the merits of the two principals' claims, ruled in its own interest!

It was as if the referee in a prizefight had declared himself the winner. Cynics had always suspected that the Court did not forget its self-interest in its decisions, but they never expected to hear it say so.

The three justices who signed that opinion evidently didn't realize what they were saying. A distinguished veteran Court-watcher (who approved of Roe,�by the way) told me he had never seen anything like it.

The Court was actually telling us that it put its own welfare ahead of the merits of the arguments before it. In its confusion, it was blurting out the truth.

But by then, very few Americans could even remember the original constitutional plan. The original plan was as Madison and Tocqueville described it: State government was to be the rule, federal government the exception.

The states' powers were to be "numerous and indefinite", federal powers "few and defined." This is a matter not only of history, but of iron logic: the Constitution doesn't make sense when read any other way. As Madison asked, why bother listing particular federal powers unless unlisted powers are withheld?

The unchecked federal government has not only overflowed its banks; it has even created its own economy.

Thanks to its exercise of a myriad of unwarranted powers, it can claim tens of millions of dependents, at least part of whose income is due to the abuse of the taxing and spending powers for their benefit: government employees, retirees, farmers, contractors, teachers, artists, even soldiers.

Large numbers of these people are paid much more than their market value because the taxpayer is forced to subsidize them.

By the same token, most taxpayers would instantly be better off if the federal government simply ceased to exist � or if it suddenly returned to its constitutional functions.

Can we restore the Constitution and recover our freedom? I have no doubt that we can. Like all great reforms, it will take an intelligent, determined effort by many people. I don't want to sow false optimism.

But the time is ripe for a constitutional counterrevolution.

Discontent with the ruling system, as the 1992 Perot vote showed, is deep and widespread among several classes of people: Christians, conservatives, gun owners, taxpayers, and simple believers in honest government all have their reasons. The rulers lack legitimacy and don't believe in their own power strongly enough to defend it.

The beauty of it is that the people don't have to invent a new system of government in order to get rid of this one. They only have to restore the one described in the Constitution � the system our government already professes to be upholding. Taken seriously, the Constitution would pose a serious threat to our form of government.

And for just that reason, the ruling parties will be finished as soon as the American people rediscover and awaken their dormant Constitution.

I wonder how many of the bills are actually read by people who sponsor or vote on them.

Unfortunately for the Senator, his campaign decided to deny the shotgun would have been banned without offering an explanation as to why, and they've attacked the Republicans for bringing it up.

If the shotgun would have been banned, they could have scored some credibility points by saying "Whoops!".

If I ever ran for congress, I think one of my main issues would be the need to simplify and reduce the number of laws we have so more people could understand what they were expected to do.

This is very interesting as Ben Barnes, former Lt. Governor of Texas is set to air an interview with Dan Rather on CBS.

It would appear that Barnes is going to say that he used his influence as Lt. Governor to get the young George W. Bush into the Texas Air National Guard.

Strange thing is.... GWB was in the TANG in 1968, and Barnes did not become Lt. Gov. until 1969...

Guess this needs a bit more clarification.

Apparently he was Speaker of the Texas House at the time. Strange though that he claims he was not contacted by a member of the Bush family, but rather a NOW DECEASED Sidney Adger, a Houston oilman.

It is unfortunate that Mr. Adger is no longer here to shed some light on this matter.

The Russians began deporting Chechens to Siberia and what became the gulag in the Czarist days, and continued under Stalin with renewed vigor. The policy was to "Russianify" minorities. A policy started in the 18th century with Peter the Great. Approx 1.3 million Chechens were deported in the 20th century, with 10% dying in transport. The Russians eventually had to give up on some minorities and now we have a host of new countries, e.g., the "-stan" countries, Georgia, Armenia, Bylerus. Some of the smaller minorities were more effectively wiped out, or so they thought (e.g., Caucasians (from Caucasus mountains, not white people), Karachai, Balkars, Tartars, Khemsils, Kurds. I guess they were more or less successful with some of these: I hadn't heard of some of them before. The Chechen Autonomous Republic was dissolved by Stalin in the late 1940's. The excuse was alleged collaboration with the Nazis, of which there is evidence of 335 people doing so (ref "Gulag" - Anne Applebaum, 2003). Now we have the problem of re-emergent ethnic identity that is emboldened by Islamic fundamentalism, poor social conditions, and a long history of hatred.

Grozny (capital) is mostly rubble today. Exact civilian casuality numbers are not known from the two Russian invasions in the 1990's, but it is thought that about 100,000 were killed. RN had a reporter there about a year and half ago and described the lack of clean water, heating fuel, food, shelter. The Russians have blockaded various parts of the region at various times to try to starve out areas where the rebels are holed up. Unknown the ongoing civilian casualities. I don't think the situation will get better soon. The news today suggests that the Russians support aggressive offensives after the school massacre. Many Chechens no doubt support terrorism against the Russians based on both the 1990's and long history of deportation and invasion. The history of the region is a disaster and the future looks the same.

I'm very much aware of where Canada is, and Calgary's place in it.

I have a QSL from CFVP on 6030.

They also seem to be on 11820 starting at 05:00 UTC, instead of 9615 as of last Saturday (Sunday in NZ).

I didn't stick around long enough to get an ID, as they were talking about the impact of war on veterans, and didn't ID on the half hour.

It will stabilize the oscillator. The real question is whether it is needed. It could be useful if you are going to park on one frequency and the receiver has to stay on frequency for a long time. As you might find when receiving a multiplex signal. For most modern receivers drift isn't a real problem.

Oh, yeah? Try dropping a Satellite 800 on your foot.

Dead children are dead children. Why is one child killer a terrorist and another not? If you kill babies using an airplane or helicopter are you less guilty of murder than a guy with a handgrenade?

Shooting missiles or dropping bunker busters into an eight storey apartment building because there MAY be a wanted person in the basement is unforgivable. 'Pre emptive' strikes are murder..I don't care how you slice it. The disease is spreading. Now the Americans and Russians are getting in on what used to be a purely Mossad aberation.

Who knows, maybe it's because the Republicans no longer have slaves...

He actually got suspended from flying.

Records Say Bush Balked at Order
National Guard Commander Suspended Him From Flying, Papers Show

By Michael Dobbs and Thomas B. Edsall
Washington Post Staff Writers
Thursday, September 9, 2004; Page A01

President Bush failed to carry out a direct order from his superior in the Texas Air National Guard in May 1972 to undertake a medical examination that was necessary for him to remain a qualified pilot, according to documents made public yesterday.

Documents obtained by the CBS News program "60 Minutes" shed new light on one of the most controversial episodes in Bush's military service, when he abruptly stopped flying and moved from Texas to Alabama to work on a political campaign. The documents include a memo from Bush's squadron commander, Lt. Col. Jerry B. Killian, ordering Bush "to be suspended from flight status for failure to perform" to U.S. Air Force standards and failure to take his annual physical "as ordered."

The problem with gun legislation is they want to ban aspects of the weapons. Some times its certain combination of things someone thinks makes the gum more dangerous. It is all a bunch of BS to anyone that is familiar with guns. The bill Kerry wants to pass forbids any kind of auto loading shotgun and shotguns with certain other features like a keyhole or pistol grip.

Kerry didn't take to well to his military training.

Just remember that people who want to ban one kind of gun really want to ban them all.

Are you for Smarter Bombs or Smarter Kids? Poll...

http://engforum.pravda.ru/showthread.php3?threadid=95911

Let the photos flash before your eyes and ask yourself: "Am I for smarter bombs or smarter kids?"

Understanding the uncivil war

The Uncivil War affects every American, whether raising kids on an hourly wage with no health insurance, or dodging bullets on the streets of Baghdad, or ingesting dirty air and water, or wondering if our votes will count in the coming election. This conflict is as old as the 13 Colonies and as new as Swift Boat Veterans for Truth. Until now, the two sides have never been precisely defined --- or named. We call them Retro and Metro America. On this website you can learn about these two Americas and how the escalating war between them affects each of our lives. You also can order the groundbreaking bestseller: The Great Divide: Retro vs. Metro America.

And you could win an environmentally-friendly, anti-war machine Toyota Prius.

Well folks, it looks sadly like Shortwave Kook-Radio has lost another commensurate broadcasting goofball....

Elizabeth Border's goofy radio show which was at 11:00 PM on WWRB 5.085 weeknights appears to have been replaced with another run-of-the-mill redundant southern bible thumper.

How sad!

Border was a true shortwave kook. Right up there with the nutty guy that used to be on WBCQ who used to say that David Rockefeller was living on an orbiting spaceship, and Jackie Petru on WWCR (?) who is a current female mental-patient with a microphone cable passed under the bars of her padded cage at the local State Mental Hospital in Attica (>?)
(see www.sweetliberty.org for her ultra-paranoid and VERY AMUSING web site)

As for Elizabeth Border, she was best described in the July 2004 issue of http://members.localnet.com/~lukebush/X-R%2335b.htm Radio Blog. This site is an EXCELLENT RESOURCE FOR TRACKING SHORTWAVE RADIO KOOKS, MASTERFULLY WRITTEN BY www.xrayer.com at RayXr@aol.com - BE SURE TO BOOKMARK THEIR SITE !!)

We quote from the site above.... :

------------------ begin -------------

>> A Divided Reality <<

Just when I thought I had heard everything that Christian-patriot shortwave radio has to offer...

Frequency: 5.085 MHz. Station: WWRB.
Day: Wednesday.
Hour: 11 PM Eastern Time.
Program: The Divided Kingdom, hosted by Elizabeth Border.

Border sounds like all the other ultra-right-wingers out there, rambling on about the New World Order, the Communist conspiracy, the abortionists -- until she illustrates her points by mutating her program into a weird children's show.............

After speaking a while on a certain topic, her program shifts gears and a radio play is presented, featuring Border using a high-pitched voice to portray Barbie, a simple country girl trying to keep up with the plans of the Great Conspiracy. In one episode she confronted Fatherland Security, the personification of the Patriot Act (a character also voiced by Border, using a deep tone and a strangely inflected rising-and-falling speech pattern).

Barbie is walking along when she hears some terrifying sounds coming from an open manhole. Fatherland Security suddenly appears. Barbie asks him to close the manhole cover so she can't hear those horrifying screams and moans.
After complying with her wishes, Fatherland Security talks a while with Barbie, both characters serving as mouthpieces for Elizabeth Border's conspiracy theories. (Author intrusion to the max.)
At one point Fatherland Security reads a news article to Barbie related to the plans of the Evil Ones.

Barbie knows Fatherland Security is part of the grand evil plot -- but being a good-natured soul, she's trying to convert F.S. to the good side. Except the manhole cover keeps opening up and those tortured souls below keep interrupting her.....

After getting the manhole to hell closed again, Barbie squeaks on about how Fatherland Security is dressed differently this time. Before he wore a black uniform and boots, looking like Darth Vader; now he wears a suit and tie. F.S. points out that his neckwear is red, white and blue. Barbie asks him if he's going to celebrate the Fourth of July, American independence, or is he going to celebrate Adam Weishaupt who founded the Order of the Illuminati in 1776? She wonders what side is he is really on......

Fatherland Security laughs, keeps Barbie guessing as he returns to his cavernous manhole of damnation, the agonizing screams heard one more time. Barbie tells him to repent, repent...

I could tell you more, but after recalling all of this stuff, I have to drop some MKULTRA acid and see what condition my condition is in."

----------- end --------------

I couldn't have put it any better myself!

Bye-Bye Lizzie B.  We're gonna mis ja!  ;)

We need more "off topic" posts like this.... :-)

You are going to get a lot of bull on this subject, largely built on mythology.

Below 30 MHz, i.e. shortwave, and with only a 50 foot cable length, cable loss simply isn't an issue.

What is important, however, is that your cable be capable of surviving conditions outside. So, the cable should be UV resistant, "non-contaminating," meaning that water won't get in and destroy the dielectric between the shield and the center conductor. Finally, it should be "direct burial" if you plan to, well, bury it.

> I currently have > about 50 feet of fairly thin (RG174) coax that I'm using to feed an outdoor active antenna that's mounted on the fire escape outside my window. I'm thinking about mounting the antenna on the roof of my apartment building and suspect 50 ft of feed line might just be enough to allow me to do that. However, a friend of mine told me that 50 ft of RG174 is going to allow too much signal loss. So, there you have my first question: Is 50 ft of RG174 coax a bad feedline?

Yes, but not because of the loss. At 30 MHz, the highest frequency you'll be using, it has a loss of less than 3dB. However, it it not UV resistent or non-contaminating, so it'll get waterlogged and break down relatively quickly.

Almost any coax would be better, given those characteristics. My personal favorite is RG-8X, because it is extremely flexible. RG-58 has higher losses (who cares?) and is less flexible, but the most-easily obtained RG-58 is radio shack cable, which, not to put too fine a point on it, is junk.

You can obtain RG-8X from cable-X-perts (www.cablexperts.com) among other sources.

> Am I wrong about this?

No, you are exactly correct.  Furthermore, the distance is so short.

Now if you want to get into scanners, that's a whole different ball game.  Much better cable is necessary, and losses are important.

Likewise, if you start getting into transmitting, or start running very long cable runs, you need better cable.

A final thought:  Just to give you an idea on how absurd the RG-174 argument is, I have several GPS antennas, all of which are fed with RG-174.  One of them has a 25 foot feed. GPS uses 1.5 GHz.  At 1.5 GHz, RG-174 is wet string.  Yet, somehow, it does the job just fine, despite losing over 99% of the signal over a short run.  (Preamps help overcome this problem in most external GPS antennas.)

Good luck with your new antenna mounting!

No. But that doesn't explain why you're giving so many URL's to anti-semitic sites. Be fair and balanced. If the Israeli's are, in your view, murderers, feel free to say so; just don't be surprised when someone else is able to match each of your anti-Israeli sites with five or ten anti-Palestinian sites. There's a big difference between incidental and collateral deaths and -deliberately- blowing up buses with children on them, even if it's only plausible deniability. (Which I don't believe it always is.) . I'm distressed that you can't see the difference. And quit snipping the parts of my posts that make you uncomfortable. Personally, I thought that joke photo was pretty damned funny. The guy was a TERRORIST.

Pre-emptive strikes? I haven't seen any of those going on. Are you referring to the current war in Iraq? That's merely a continuation of the first war. The one that Iraq lost. The one that we quit prosecuting on the basis of their promise to do certain things. Things that they didn't do. Remember? Surely by saying pre-emptive you're not referring to the recent killings of Hamas leaders? There's nothing pre-emptive about those, either. They already have blood on their hands. The blood of children.

By pre-emptive, do you mean us invading a country because they -may- someday harbor terrorists, or give them aid and comfort? Relax...I don't believe that Iceland has anything to fear from us. -That- would be pre-emptive. Invading  Iraq certainly wasn't, regardless of the spin that anyone wants to put on it.

Oh, and speaking of Hamas...quit snipping the parts of my posts that make you uncomfortable. Someone might mistake you for an anti-semite.

However, a friend of mine told me that 50 ft of RG174 is going to allow too much signal loss. So, there you have my first question: Is 50 ft of RG174 coax a bad feedline?

It depends on the frequency you will use it on and how much signal you are willing to lose.

RG174

| MHz | dB loss for 50 foot |
|---|---|
| 50 | -2.9 |
| 100 | -4.2 |
| 200 | -6.25 |
| 400 | -9.5 |
| 1000 | -17 |

3 dB is half your power so you will lose half your signal around 50 MHz and it gets worse the higher in frequency you go.

If you are using this cable for HF then you can plot these points in Excel. The line should be fairly linear and the loss will not be as bad.

> The second question is this. My friend seemed to think that the 50 ft run to my roof would result in greater signal loss than the much shorter run to my fire escape, even though we're talking about 50 ft of coax either way. This didn't make sense to me. 50 ft of coax is 50 ft of coax, it seems to me, whether it's coiled and leading just outside my window or straight and leading all the way up to the roof.
> Am I wrong about this?

The loss is over the length of the cable, it does not matter where it is routed. If the fire escape is closer and you cut the coax for that shortened distance then you will experience less loss.

You got numbers to back that up? I could be wrong but I thought Kerry raised more money than Bush or maybe I'm reminded of the money raised by Congo on 5985 is coming in here quite well at 0440 in French, Radio Congo ID at 0445.

Life is good when WYFR is off the air. Hurricanes can indeed be a positive force.

Missionary organizations have set up an evangelical shortwave station in the Democratic Republic of Congo. Radio Tangazeni Kristo (RTK) operates from the town of Aru, just across the border from Arua in Uganda. Finnish DXer Jari Savolainen found out that RTK is broadcasting on 4845 kHz in the 60-meter shortwave band with very low power. RTK is jointly operated by Communaut� Evang�lique au Centre de l'Afrique (CECA-20) and Die Gute Nachricht f�r Afrika (DIGUNA). CECA-20 is nationwide church originally established by the UK-based Africa Inland Mission International (AIM), while DIGUNA is a German missionary organization. There is also an RTK FM station in Bunia. The programs are mainly in local languages with some content in Swahili, French and English. According to Savolainen the transmissions run daily at 0330-0515 UTC in the mornings, and at 1400-1930 UTC in the evenings from Monday to Friday. During the weekends the scheduled broadcast time is 1155-1930 UTC. Savolainen has a source who says that in the beginning of September transmitter power will be raised to 300-500 watts.

UA,

Stop spreading this lie about DPR of Korea sending 'prisoners' to help other governments that are friendly to the peoples democratic republic and its people..  These are "Peoples Volunteers" and their families are rewarded with an extra ration of food and water for their patriotic service.

Well, in 1952 (this may be out of date) the Tech and General exams were the same except Tech didn't have any code or privileges, and there was a nifty Novice test with 5wpm code nonrenewable that lasted a year, for you to get your code speed up to the General's 13wpm. If you didn't go on the air over that time in code, you had a tough time meeting the code requirement. If you did, it was easy. Anyway judging from the experience of a typical child and his father following these two paths.

Then it all started going downhill and God only knows what it is today. I don't even know what the power limits or bands are. We used to have a nifty KW into a backyard antenna, after years of sultry upgrades, and sending code would dim the lights and shrink TV pictures.

You could pass any written test by memorizing the ARRL's License Manual but code was apparently the killer for grownups.

Missionary positions have set up an evangelical shortwave station in the Democratic Republic of Finland. Radio Vitun Viikset (RVV) operates from the town of Jaala, just 7000 miles from Ulaan Baator, Mongolia. Finnish DXer Jari

Savolainen found out after a summer of heavy drinking that RVV is broadcasting on 24845.5 kHz in the alco-meter shortwave band with ONE BILLION WATTS of power. RVV is jointly operated by Herttareetin Huorissak�yv�t Ukkomiehet (PANO-69) and Die Gute Nachricht f�r Elise und Eva Braun (VITTU-5). PANO-69 is nationwide church originally established by the Freebasing African Jungle Jumpers International (HOTTENTOTTI), while VITTU-5 is a liberal Amish missionary position organization.

There is also an RFCK FM station in Iitti. The programs are mainly in local languages with some content in Savo, Suomi, Swahili, French, Russian, Mexican, Ebonics and English. According to Savolainen he is running out of things to drink (donations appreciated) but the transmissions run daily at 0330-0331 UTC in the mornings, and at 1400-1359 UTC in the evenings from Monday until the Finnish state liqueur monopoly (ALKO) opens. During the weekends the scheduled broadcast time is 1931-1930 UTC or when the station personnel falls asleep. Savolainen has a source for cheap Estonian vodka who says that in the beginning of September transmitter power will be raised to 300-500 BILLION watts.

It's no big deal, go to the ARRL site and they have a section where you can locate local ham clubs. Make a few calls and you'll find a club that tests, usually at hamfests or ham radio classes. You can do it, get the book "Now your talking", study it for a month or so and go for it.

Bush's record and the deaths in Iraq
September 9, 2004

THE US government spent $1 million for George Bush's flight training, and he apparently didn't fulfill his duty to the Texas Air National Guard ("Bush fell short on duty at Guard," Page A1, Sept. 8). Had the disciplinary code been followed, Bush would have served in Vietnam, facing the risks of combat. But as the son of a congressman, he instead earned a big wink and there were no consequences for his dereliction of duty.

What does the man who was given a pass think about the 1,000 men and women who have died in Iraq and the many more who have been wounded? What does he think about those National Guardsmen who were called up and even had their tours of duty extended?

Revelations about Bush's failure to fulfill his duty to the Guard, his country, and to us are shocking. They make it harder to justify our wanton sacrifice of the young and powerless in a military adventure that in the beginning was avoidable and now appears unwinnable.

I am getting what I believe to be CODAR on two areas of the dial, centered on these freqs.: 4546 and 4800 kHz. As I am located on Long Island, NY I expect that these are originating from stations on the New Jersey shore.

I am familiar of Joyce & Dave and Alex Jones but am wondering if anyone has any other good shortwave programs that can be found on shortwave? Even real far out shows can make for interesting listening. I am compiling a list for a new handicapped listener. Thanks.

"Ordeal?"
The ham license is now far less challenging than putting money in a parking meter. You've got the code crybabies and corporate charlatans to thank for that.

How insensitive you are for a liberal. Russians in general are fine people. Perhaps you mean Communist lovers instead of Russian lovers.
Usually you can tell them by their liberal fantasies.

The key to getting a Ham license is determination as is any license.

If you see it as an ordeal -- you'll probably flake out.
If you see it as another of life's challenges -- you will pass as has 675,000 others from ages 9 to 90

For an overview -- See URL:

The Democrats, on the other hand, only have rich people in positions of power; their followers are largely poor due to enslavement by entitlement programs.

My heart goes out to poor, impecunious Democrats like George Soros and Ted Kennedy.

Not the ARRL manual; it was that guy whose name I can't remember, who published guides made up by paying testees to remember questions and multiple-guess answers just after leaving the testing sessions.

That may have been Dick Bash KL7IHP... as I recall.

Well, with friends like these - you know.

Both are execrable as trustworthy nations go.  We're in bed with the villains, in Saudi Arabia's case purely because of oil.  Without our bucks, they'd terrorize us in a heartbeat, and you know that they already support it.

There's Jack Blood, a Jones clone, who comes on for a couple of hours after AJ.

Steve Quayle can be interesting, especially if you're interested in how the giants mentioned in Genesis connect to -- well, just about everything.  As far as I know, Steve Quayle is the only SW broadcaster who has had his name trademarked (Stephen Quayle (TM))

There's also Jeffery Bennett's daily rant, Perspective on America.  Mostly the message is -- America sure got screwed up over the last few years.  Buy Gold.

If your friend doesn't mind evangelism mixed with the politics, Texe Marrs' Power of Prophesy show is worth a listen.  Texe specializes in such subjects as how the Jews and the Freemasons fit into the New World Order.  That is common enough, but Texe distinguishes himself from the lesser conspiritorialists by always keeping a cheerful, optimistic outlook.  He's the Happy Warrior in the world of Special Knowledge.

These shows can be found on this schedule:

http://www.wwcr.com/wwcr_links/wwcr_programming_links.html

Some of those other shows look pretty good, as well.  I haven't heard them all.

Generally, any show about prophesy can be interesting, especially if the Prophet claims to speak directly to God.  Of course, this is Brother Stair, AKA The Last Day Prophet of God.  His broadcasts are particularly interesting because I'm not aware of one instance in which Brother Stair has made a correct prediction, let alone a prophesy.

James Lloyd makes his prophesies by studying the Bible and applying his studies to the modern world.  His greatest recent prophesy was the massive terrorist attack on the United States on July 4, 2003.  Another prophesy concerned another attack on July 4, 2004.  James Lloyd also likes to ramble on about the "rapture cult" and how they are headed straight to Hell.

So, this is my reward for being mostly on-topic for the last few months. I get plonked by some useless RRS non-contributor. At one time, I was proud to have been plonked by the best. I was found in the best killfiles everywhere.

Oh, the ignominy.

I have my Plastic Jesus in a hula-skirt on my dashboard that pees on the person in the passenger seat when they try to pull her skirt down.

As for the cunt's website above, she looks like 2-B just another Jew-hating piece of white poebucker trailer trash on domestic short-wave.
Protocols of The Elders of Zion and other notorious forgeries that gave rise to Nazi Germany and similar Fascists Govt.'s

I'll bet she and sever others of her ilk on Shortwave Hate Radio are all in deep mourning today, as this morning the "elder statesman of hate", Richard Butler, The Leader and Founder of Aryan Nations Church of Jesus Christ Christian (sic), was found dead in his bed, shit-the-sheets and all.....

(How Nice!  Let's hope they can find a toilet big enough to flush his pathetic carcass down thru or just dump him into the human waste digester machine tank at the local sewage and wastewater treatment plant in Idaho or wherever he was found...or jus dump him into the desert and let the vultures pick him clean for dinner -  YUM YUM !!!)

Subjecting a handicapped/disabled person to the type of conspiratorial garbage that Joyce & Dave, RG Stair and Alex Jones offloads into the Ionosphere on a daily basis may be construed as form of abusive and unusual punishment, but then again when you think about it, most of (their) pay-triot listeners are all abject retards anyway so I guess that doing this just might not be a bad idea after all !

My blessings to you my son --->  "PFHBBBBLTTT !!!"

Now, go forward, and do the work of the lord and be sure to 'make those checks out to Annie'..........

---------------

Grammitical Note of The Day:  For those of you who didn't take College English Writing Courses like I did at UMD College Park and The UofW at Madison, whenever you want to convey the act of passing a VERY LOUD Broccoli Fart in writing as in mixed company like at a party setting, or in those hardwood church 'phews' at 2nd Baptist during an altar-call, you can do this by typing the word: " PFHBBBBLTTT !!! "

See! you learned something new today. Now go and make a sign with  " PFHBBBBLTTT !!! " on it in big black marker and tape it to the CEO's or the Mail Room Sorter's office. Great for laughs.

No, the License Manual I think was from the ARRL.  It's what everybody used, and the questions matched, anyway I don't remember any surprises.

Dr Gene Scott on 6.090 is usually good for a bunch of fun. He yells at his people to give him money, and he plays some cool music. One evening he played Layla and Stay With Me.

Though not indicated on their website, the Hurricane Watch Net appears to be active on 14325, at least on some sort of limited basis as Ivan makes its approach to Jamaica and then on to Cuba.

Where can I tune to hear US political talk on the shortwave dial. I live in the northeast/mid-atlantic region.

I don't care if it is liberal or conservative.

I prefer not to listen to reruns or religious programming.

Do believe during that era Some clerk-typist sat down at a typewriter with "N" carbon copies and typed out the document.
Since you were using a Typewriter Ribbon, letters got filled with Ink.
The letter "e", being a commonly used letter, used to get clogged up quite often, meaning you had to eventually clean the letters on the typewriter with a "Q" tip and Alcohol.
If you didn't clean the keys, the ink would build up, eventually giving you a smudgy looking letter.

Hmmmmmm... are Kerry's Swift Boat pals being compensated? Have their stories been dissected?  Have they been prepped for appearances or filmings?

Something to think about.

I'm going to pick up a copy of "Now Your Talking" and also see about contacting a local ham club for the test.  I'm going to prep for the Tech and General because I really want to have acess to the sw/long range bands too.  I already know partial Morse code.  I learned using a program called NuMorse a few years ago. It took me about three weeks to be able to decode by ear.  The only problem is, I just learned the letters and not numbers or punctuation.  I didnt bother when them.  I figured that the letters would be good enough :-)  Now, I'll have to go back to NuMorse and do all the numbers and then, mix them in with the alphabet in quizz mode. I also never used a key before.  I just learned enough to listen to the ham bands and decode by ear and not transmit.  I can decode faster then 5 wpm, so I'm sure I can pass the morse test after I mix in the numbers.  I just need to learn numbers now too. Shouldn't take me too long.  I also had a look at some pool questions.  I was able to answer a lot of them already.  Still... I need to study up to pass...  I was most worried about having to spend time with clubs or groups... I dont have the time for that.  After I prep, I just want to show up, take the test and get out... :-)

Thanx again for the help !!!

Michael

You can also add:

John Stadtmiller with the National Intel Report weeknights on: 12160 @ 5:00
EST & second hour of the show 9475 @ 6:00 UTC.  Lots of "New World Order" Conspiracy Stuff....

Rick Wiles with TruNews weeknights on 7315 @ 9:30 EST.  He is a lot like Steve Quayle.  Gives all the doom and gloom news stories and tells you to prepair for the end times.

Both go great with popcorn or some other snacks... :-)

I am very very upset!!! I didn't make the list!!!

Dear Mr. Bryant,

Couldn't you find a little something that you don't like about me, I have called you names, bad names in the past. I have made reffrences to you family tree and maybe the lack of a father in your life (sob). Also I will never forgive you for not running away from hame at 15 and joining the service.

So, please reconsider adding me to your "Wanker" list, I promiss to do a little "wanking" every change I get.

As Always, You friend and supporter.

He said he was quite disappointed with the lack of phone in contributors last night. They needed volunteers for ushering or something too. He's from Texas I think.

His voice reminds me of the Grandfatherly types in bulky sweaters (most likely ex military) brought out by the administration of the day to tell people in TV land why what it is they are doing overseas is legal AND necessary AND SO Mom and Apple Pie-ish...

It's entirely believable.

I don't know, Gandalf. I'm certainly no Bush fan, and I would love for these documents to be authentic and I would love to see them (or anything else) bring W down and out of office.

But I place a high value on the Truth. And the fact here is: the people who are questioning these documents are making some damned good points. The font is a proportional one, the "th" is smaller and superscripted, the letters seem to be kerned, etc. etc. etc. There seem to be a number of problems witrh these documents - they really don't smell right.

I think they need to be thoroughly investigated - by REAL investigators, like the FBI - not by CBS. And then let the chips fall where they may.

I would LOVE to see Bush tossed out of office, but it MUST be for the right reasons and in the proper way. It MUST be based on the truth.

And look at it this way - if you admantly insist that these documents are authentic, and then it turns out that they are not, it will only make you look foolish. There are plenty of valid reasons to be opposed to George Bush, we don't need to be making any up.

How does that explain the White House releasing the same documents after 60 Minutes aired them?  Did the White House fake another set of papers to make dubbya look bad?

Greg (I heard it on the radio)

BTW - Drudge is often right.  He has very good sources.  He is also often wrong.  And he's a salacious gossip monger.  Visiting his web site can turn your brains to mush.

Go buy the book. It is all documented. They even provide time lines of events. The book even has FBI reports on Kerry's antiwar activities.
Remember that the real problem the people have that served with Kerry was what he did upon his return from Vietnam and most of that is on tape.

Any liberal should know better...

I think we should all start calling liberals "old-fart-liberals."

Any old-fart-liberal should know better than to call all Russians communists.

I heard a net last night from Jamaica on 14.283, between 1:00 and 2:00 Z.
Some Jamaica men eating fried fish and Johnny cakes, talking about how Grenada was taking a whooping.  Don't hear them tonight tho.  Hope they make it through Ivan okay. They also spoke of a morning net on 7.195 starting at 5:30 or 6:00 a.m., their local time I think.

The more I read about the docs (and the more I look at them myself) the more they stink.  It seems to me that somebody might have been getting a little over-zealous in trying to discredit Bush.  Maybe within the Kerry campaign.  If so, then that person (or persons) needs to be tracked down and prosecuted.  Or maybe an independent left-wing wacko who thought he was doing a Good Thing.  Or could be even someone on Bush's side (or an independent thinking they're doing something for Bush) who made forgeries that would be found out and would thereby discredit the Kerry campaign.

I don't know what the answer is right now, but whatever it is, it needs to be discovered and made VERY public, and prosecutions need to happen, no matter who the culprits turn out to be.  This sort of dirty trick has NO PLACE in a democracy.

Of course - this assumes that the docs ARE forgeries, and we don't know that for sure yet.  There is a possibility that they are genuine - but they sure do smell bad.

We need to know the TRUTH about this.

And if they do turn out to be forgeries, I would think that Dan Rather's career is about over.

Not so fast.  You appear insufficiently obsessed with bashing Bush to qualify for inclusion in that group.   The real haters here appear way ahead of you on that count.

It an all volunteer service Lyle you moron. We will win it and we can fight them in Iraq or here in the US. I vote for Iraq.

Just as well.  He just doesn't have the 'stature' of a Britt Hume :)

I just read another comment in another thread that suggested that one of the letters in Kerry's military file might be a forgery.

Now that suggests that all of Kerry's documents need to be examined and all of Bush's documents need to be examined.

And all by independent experts.

Now isn't that interesting?

It would be ironic indeed if this election comes down to a really bad reality TV version of CSI Miami rather than an honest debate about where this country has gone in the last four years and where it ought to be going in the future.

Bryant is the longest running Troll in RRS. I don't kill file him because of the entertainment value he provides.

Bryant does not get anything right.

I've been reading Bryant for years and he lies at the drop of a hat. I will not believe anything he posts without something that backs it up.

After reading him for years I realized he has been faking it. Just because something he posts seems "believable" does not make it so.
Bryant has no credibility.

It's pretty unlikely that 60 Minutes "ran" with the story without a fairly strenuous attempt to validate the documents.  They might have been wrong and it might turn out that the docs are plants, but 60 Minutes is regularly challenged by all quarters and I've got a feeling that they go out of their way to vet anything they present as "evidence."

Regarding the charge that the fonts prove the documents are fake:

BZZZZT! Try again. The White House distributed the memos ...

http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/5952048/

... and didn't question their authenticity is well taken. As for the font not being available in the 70s, the claim is that proportional fonts were not available until the seventies.

http://www.cnsnews.com/ViewPolitics.asp?Page=%5CPolitics%5Carchive%5C200409%5CPOL20040909d.html

In fact, they've been around since the forties.

Anyone wanting to watch an interesting documentary on what it's like to be a real debater should check out "National Debate Tournament" on The CSTV (College Sports TV) cable station showing all month long.

"It struck me as I was speaking to people in Bangor, Maine, that this president sees America as we think about a 10-year-old child,"  -- Andrew Card, ranking member of the West Wing

This confirms that all our right wing folks who made all kinds of individualistic and anti-government grunts and honks during the 90s really just want a government that is a cross between Jehovah and daddy.

Yeah, on mainframes and midranges, and programs like Displaywrite 360 or Displaywrite 36 were very crude and couldn't do superscripts or proportional fonts. They used EBCIDIC coding, not ASCII, and sophisticated fonts and functions were never written into them.

Check the documents for yourself.  They smell.  Bad.  And the bloggers make some damned good arguments.

I'm no Bush fan, by any means.  I'd LOVE to see him retired.
Rejected.  Dumped.  But the Truth is important.  And the Truth is, these documents stink.

The whole thing stinks, and it needs to be fully exposed, no matter who ends up getting hurt.  Dirty tricks have no place in a democracy.
It needs to be FULLY investigated.

So if it hasn't made it to print yet, how do you know the FBI thinks they're Developing? Actually already DEBUNKED!!!

Electric ball typewriters could do that, and the US government had lots of them.

You guys are desperate and in total denial.

Bush deserted and there is proof of that.

Of course, the question remains, How could '60 Minutes' fall for something like that?  I saw what I took to be representations of the memos on the show, but didn't know they were supposed to be the memos themselves.  If what I'm hearing is true; that the documents presented as the originals had proportional font, 13pt spacing, curly apostrophes, were in TNR, then yes, they are forgeries.  No typewriter existed in 1973 that could do those things.  A print shop could, but who the hell sends out their memos to get laid out by a print shop?

"It struck me as I was speaking to people in Bangor, Maine, that this president sees America as we think about a 10-year-old child,"  -- Andrew Card, ranking member of the West Wing

This confirms that all our right wing folks who made all kinds of individualistic and anti-government grunts and honks during the 90s really just want a government that is a cross between Jehovah and daddy.

I just imagine Mikey wistfully staring at the screen dreaming that he is still apart of that debating jet-set lifestyle.

The documents, as described, could not have been done on a typewriter in 1973.  But were the docs shown described as being the originals, or did CBS have someone on a word processor scan them and clean them up?
If the former, 60 Minutes just suffered a terrible blow to its journalistic integrity.  If the latter, they embarrassed themselves by not identifying what they showed as being representations, but would survive the embarrassment.

You're right, of course.  I would love for the memos to be authentic, but I won't knowingly embrace falsified evidence.

Kerry was there. Was on the list of speakers, is in the FBI reports.

Nice try.

On CBSnews.com - they have the docs as PDF's.  Get 'em quick, before they disappear.

But actually, I have a feeling this is going to blow up.  At the very least, this is going to be devastating to CBS and Rather - bigger than the old "exploding pickup truck" thing from whichever newsmagazine show that was a few years ago.  I suspect that it's going to be a big story.

I know that we're supposed to have the faith that the FBI will use their expertise to determine the authenticity of the docs, but remember who runs the FBI.

XXXXX DRUDGE REPORT XXXXX THU SEPT 09, 2004 22:45:32 ET XXXXX

Marjorie Connell - widow of the late Lt. Col. Jerry Killian, the reported author of memos suggesting that Bush did not meet the standards for the Texas Air National Guard - questions whether the documents are real on tonight's NIGHTLINE, sources tell DRUDGE.

Transcript:

I WAS ANGRY, BECAUSE HERE THEY ARE GOING BACK AND PULLING RECORDS OF A MAN WHO IS DECEASED TWENTY YEARS, WHO IS NOT HERE TO EXPLAIN WHAT ANY OF THESE DOCUMENTS SAID OR SUPPOSED TO HAVE SAID, AND I JUST FOUND IT APPALLING. I WAS SICK THAT HERE WITHOUT WARNING HIS PICTURES ARE UP THERE, HIS NAME IS BEING BATTLED BACK AND FORTH AND I, LIVID I GUESS IS A BETTER WORD FOR IT."

"I THINK THERE WAS SO MUCH UNTRUTHS BEING SAID THAT THAT FRUSTRATED ME AND THAT I KNEW THAT IF JERRY WERE ALIVE TODAY THAT HE WOULD JUST, NUMBER ONE HE WOULD BE TURNING OVER IN HIS GRAVE TO KNOW THAT A DOCUMENT SUCH AS THIS WOULD BE USED AGAINST A FELLOW GUARDSMAN."

"THAT IS WHAT AGGRAVATED ME SO MUCH, WAS THAT HE CAN NOT BE HERE TO SAY AND YET THEY CAN DRAG HIS NAME ONTO TELEVISION, MAKING BAD ACCUSATIONS ABOUT OUR PRESIDENT AND A MAN THAT HE RESPECTED AND I KNOW FOR A FACT THAT HE THOUGHT THIS YOUNG MAN AS A SECOND LIEUTENANT OR FIRST LIEUTENANT WAS AN EXCELLENT AVIATOR, AN EXCELLENT PERSON TO BE IN THE GUARD AND WAS VERY HAPPY TO HAVE HIM BECOME A MEMBER OF THE 111TH F-I-S."

"NUMBER ONE, HE WOULD NOT HAVE TYPED BECAUSE HE DID NOT TYPE. NUMBER TWO, THE WORDING IN THESE DOCUMENTS IS VERY SUSPECT TO ME. I JUST DON'T BELIEVE THAT, IT LOOKS LIKE SOME THINGS MAY HAVE BEEN PICKED UP OUT OF A DOCUMENT AND THEN OTHER THINGS JUST MADE FICTITIOUSLY TO FILL IN THINGS, TO MAKE THEM FLOW. I JUST CAN'T BELIEVE THAT THIS IS HIS WORDS, MY LATE HUSBAND'S WORDS."

"NOT A TYPIST, DEFINITELY NOT A TYPIST. WE HAD NO COMPUTERS AT HOME BUT HE WASN'T A TYPIST, AND WHAT IS REMARKABLE TO ME IS THAT HE WAS A PERSON WHO DID NOT TAKE OR MAKE COPIOUS NOTES. HE CARRIED EVERYTHING IN HIS MIND AND HE DIDN'T HAVE TIME TO MAKE NOTES."

"I AM STILL PRESENTLY LOOKING FOR OTHER DOCUMENTS. I HAVE FOUND SOME THAT SAY THE 147TH ON THEM AND THEY GO BACK TO 1970. I CAN NOT FIND ANY AT THIS MOMENT THAT HAVE ANY 1972 INDICATIONS ON THEM OTHER THAN A, AND I TOLD HER THAT, A FLIGHT SCHEDULE THAT HE HAD JUST SIGNED HIS NAME TO."

"UNFORTUNATELY WHEN WE MOVED I PUT THINGS IN DIFFERENT LOCATIONS AND I JUST DON'T KNOW WHERE EVERYTHING IS AT THIS MOMENT AND I WAS SEARCHING FOR THEM AND I STILL HAVE NOT FOUND ANY OTHER DOCUMENTS. I DO HAVE ALL OF HIS FLIGHT RECORDS THOUGH AND THEY ARE IN MY HANDS."

"HE DISCUSSED WITH ME HOW PROUD HE WAS TO BE ABLE TO GO AND PIN THE WINGS ON YOUNG GEORGE AND TO MEET THEN MR. BUSH, I'VE FORGOTTEN IF HE WAS WITH THE CIA OR WHAT OFFICE HE HELD AT THAT TIME AND BARBARA BUSH."

"HE LEFT THE 147TH, FLEW TO WHEREVER GEORGE GOT HIS WINGS AND JERRY PINNED THEM ON HIM AND HE WAS, CAME HOME JUST, HE TOLD ME ABOUT THAT AND HOW PROUD HE WAS TO HAVE MET THE FAMILY."

"HE WOULD JUST WRITE LITTLE NOTES ON THE BACK OF ANYTHING. UNFORTUNATELY OR FORTUNATELY AS THE CASE MAY BE, IF HE NEEDED TO JOT SOMETHING DOWN HE WOULD JOT IT ON ANY PAPER THAT HE COULD FIND, ON A CARD, LIKE A CALLING CARD THAT YOU WOULD HAVE, OR JUST LITTLE BITS OF PAPER. HE ALWAYS KNEW WHERE EVERYTHING WAS, AND IF HE NEEDED TO PULL IT OUT OF HIS WALLET ON A LITTLE NOTE OR SOMETHING, BUT HE JUST DIDN'T TAKE MANY NOTES."

He is wrong, the IBM Selectric did not have proportional fonts on them.
I worked for IBM for 27 years, the System 360 mainframes used the selectric units as the console output device. I worked on them.
The Selectric came out in the early 1960s.

Wrong, the Selectric was not capable of proportional fonts, and they were used as the output device for the System 360 console, not for the system printer. Most System 360 used the 1403 train printer as the Huh? I have documents much older than that that are perfectly legible.

There is no reason these 32 year old docs should not be legible.

So why attempt to reproduce them exactly if all you want is to get the wording of the documents. Just explain, the documents have been retyped word for word for legibility.

BZZZZTTT!!! Wrong! The Selectric could not do proportional spacing. I worked for IBM and worked on the Selectric units that were use as the output device for the System 360 mainframe console. You haven't a clue about which you speak.

IBM Selectric.  The Typewriter I learned to type on in High School.
Actually, they had two we had to learn on: a manual Olympia, and the IBM that we got to use two days a week.  We rotated.  The school thought we should learn on both manuals and electrics.  Plus, I don't think the school could actually afford two classrooms full of Selectrics.  On the other hand, my High School wasn't the Champagne Unit of the Guard.

Got 'em.  They look like fourth generation Xeroxes of word processed documents.  They are NOT the product of a 1970s general issue office typewriter.  There wasn't a typewriter on earth that could do superscript like that, and only very high-end electric typewriters with the font balls could do TNR or any other proportional font.  Not something you would find in a TANG backwater office.  National Guard in those days was for rich fuckup kids, and nobody at the Pentagon took it seriously.

As I said otherwhere, I could see CBS processing from the original for legibility's sake, although it would have been very sloppy of them not to say they had done so.  But in my opinion, these documents were designed to look like they were the originals, and that means either someone at CBS went too far for the sake of verisimultude, or CBS just committed the biggest journalistic factcheck fuckup since the Hughes Diaries.

How could it possibly have gotten past any reputable document checker?

"It struck me as I was speaking to people in Bangor, Maine,
that this president sees America as we think about a 10-year-old

Eckert's Card-Operated Table Printer arrived in February 1945, in time to produce the 1946 Air Almanac and subsequent issues. Grosch [57] describes it as "a black proportional spacing electric typewriter, which IBM had just begun to make in the Forties, in which most of the alphabetic characters had been replaced by extra numerical fonts: bold face, or small size, or small-size subscripts and superscripts; all designed to be harmonious.

Not the way it appears in those documents.  Look at the documents for yourself.  You're making a fool of yourself.  But then, you'll just change nyms and go on posting anyway, eh, Rack?  Or is that you, milt?

Composing typewriters

Derogatorily called "Strike-on" composition, the composing typewriter was used for camera-ready copy in the quick-print business, in academic publishing, and small weeklies, where cost and turn-around were the driving factors. The best were capable of proportional spacing, justification, and handling multiple fonts. The familiar IBM Executive and Selectric can be considered to be in the low-end of this family; the IBM Composing Selectric was a computer-driven, auto-justifying, high-end system.

Yeah.  I assumed at first that the people crying "forgery" were just the usual right-wing liars. But then I saw the documents, right from CBS' site.  And I came to the same conclusion.  They are bogus.

The question is:  who did it?

This is going to be a VERY interesting story.  Somebody is going to get seriously reamed here.

Actually, proportional fonts were available in the 30's - but they weren't common.  But the documents in question aren't just proportional, they're kerned, and they have superscripts with fractional height letters.  That's not a typewriter or vintage word processor.  It's typeset.

Someone said he keyed in one of the documents in Microsoft Word, printed it out, scanned it in as a graphic and superimposed it on top of the same document from CBS, and they lined up exactly.  Horizontally and vertically.

This means the default Microsoft Word kerning and line spacing rules with the default font are identical to the ones used to prepare the document.  For every letter pair, in every line.   That's incredible.

But an easy way to get a very strong indication of the validity of the documents is to get other memos from the same guy that are known to be real, from the same time frame, and see what they look like.

My guess is they'll look pretty crude compared to the questioned documents.

Nope.  The Selectric used a ball, and you could replace the ball with other balls containing other fonts, but no matter what ball was being used, the platen moved the same amount for each character that was typed. Push a key, the ball goes smack and the platen shifted one character width. There were 10-pitch and 12-pitch balls available, but you had to manually flip a switch to change the pitch of the typewriter itself. There wasn't such a thing as a proportional font for the Selectric.

And even if they had a proportional-font typewriter, if you look closely at the documents you'll see that some of the letters are actually kerned. Like the character pair "fi". I'll guarantee you there weren't any typewriters that did that. And I'd be extremely surprised if the TANG used what was at the time a HUGELY expensive typesetting machine to produce a routine memo.

You mean one of these:

http://www.columbia.edu/acis/history/tableprinter.html

Yeah.  Right.  Those TANG memos were probably produced on one of those things.  Typed up on 80-char IBM punch cards first, then fed into the machine.

Yep.  That's the ticket.

I don't know.  I don't want to seem like a sheeple here, but I'm looking at the same documents after printing them out.  Everything you say is true, but IBM typewriters were capable of doing that kind of printing in 1964 when I learned to type on an IBM ball typewriter.  Do you remember those?  Avocado green and about as heavy as a Toyota 4 cylinder engine.  I went to a poor high school and each of the two typing classrooms had twenty of them.

Additionally, CBS "says" that the documents were authenticated by "independent" experts.  That's either an outright lie, or the experts had to have come from a night job at Wendy's.  It's a little hard for me to believe that even a rookie document authenticator wouldn't be looking for that kind of thing.

Yes.  That's what I learned on.  Actually we had to switch every other day because the typing teacher thought we also needed to know how to use a manual.  The Selectric I used had the capability of multiple fonts [one of the things you had to learn was how to change the ball] and superscripts.
Actually, you could use all sorts of nifty typefaces and special characters on various balls.

Those IBMs were heavy suckers, incidentally.  Not to mention the cast iron Olympia office models.

Did they say what kind of "experts" authenticated them?

One theory is the signatures were cut from other documents and scanned in as graphics.

If they brought in a handwriting expert, a photo copy of a scanned signature would look authentic.  A handwriting expert might not even look at the type.

I don't think he's being dumb.  I think you have to have used an old selectric to actually know what those bad boys were capable of.  After printing out the pdf images from CBS, I'm struck at how much they remind me of the IBM font style we used in my high school class.  Those selectrics were capable of proportional spacing and superscripts.  Now that was in 1964.

Maybe it's just my old eyes and a failing memory, but I took your advice and printed out the pdf docs at CBS, and for the life of me I can't tell the difference between what I'm looking at here and the type that the Selectric put out in 1964.

Rather than interpret, let me just paste in what is "currently" at CBS's site:

"As is standard practice at CBS News, the documents in the 60 Minutes report were thoroughly examined and their authenticity vouched for by independent experts," CBS News said in a statement. "As importantly, 60 Minutes also interviewed close associates of Colonel Jerry Killian. They confirm that the documents reflect his opinions and actions at the time."

The White House distributed the four memos from 1972 and 1973 after obtaining them from CBS News. The White House did not question their accuracy. "

Kerry FUCKED up the ass by Dan Rather.  Murray get sloppy seconds!

Two stories out now:  (1) CBS investigating HOW they were fooled.  (2)
Barnes being outed as a deliberate liar.

Exclusive

CBS NEWS executives have launched an internal investigation into whether its premiere news program 60 MINUTES aired fabricated documents relating to Bush's National Guard service, the DRUDGE REPORT has learned.

"The reputation and integrity of the entire news division is at stake, if we are in error, it will be corrected," a top CBS source explained late Thursday.

The source, who asked not to be named, described CBSNEWS anchor and 60 MINUTES correspondent Dan Rather as being privately "shell-shocked" by the increasingly likelihood that the documents in question were fraudulent.

Rather, who anchored the segment presenting new information on the president's military service, will personally correct the record on-air, if need be, the source explained from New York. "

And then there is that lying COCKSUCKER, Ben Barnes:

"A woman alleging herself to be none other than Amy Barnes, daughter of fromer Lt Gov Ben Barnes called into a Texas radio program being hosted by well-known host Monica Crowley.

The woman, stating that her politics differed greatly from her Fathers, stated that he informed her months ago that he was going to "go public" with this story, known to be false. She claims that he has acknowledged the untruthfulness of this story to her over the years. She claims that there are two motivations for his doing this. One, to gain publicity for a book he is writing and, 2 the desperation of the Kerry campaign at this moment in time. Apparently Barnes offered to carry this tainted water if it appeared necessary in the general election to help secure a Kerry victory."

Do you want to know the TRUTH?  Do you really want to know WHY it happened?

Bob Just said it 4 years ago:

"Fueled by anger, the New Fascists [he's talking about HIS party, the Democrats] have completely adopted the radical '60s notion of the "honest con." In other words, they think that because they are "correct in their beliefs" and because in their minds what they fight is so "evil," just about any act can be committed for the sake of victory - and certainly, lying is no problem." [Bob Just, "Fascism, corruption and my 'Democratic' Party" - 7/25/2000]

And so is the election.....

Really pathetic.

Kerry FUCKED up the ass by Dan Rather.  Whoda thunk it!

Two stories out now:  (1) CBS investigating HOW they were fooled.  (2) Barnes being outed as a deliberate liar.

http://www.drudgereport.com/cbsd.htm

Exclusive

CBS NEWS executives have launched an internal investigation into whether its premiere news program 60 MINUTES aired fabricated documents relating to Bush's National Guard service, the DRUDGE REPORT has learned.

"The reputation and integrity of the entire news division is at stake, if we are in error, it will be corrected," a top CBS source explained late Thursday.

The source, who asked not to be named, described CBSNEWS anchor and 60 MINUTES correspondent Dan Rather as being privately "shell-shocked" by the increasingly likelihood that the documents in question were fraudulent.

Rather, who anchored the segment presenting new information on the president's military service, will personally correct the record on-air, if need be, the source explained from New York. "

And then there is that lying COCKSUCKER, Ben Barnes:

"A woman alleging herself to be none other than Amy Barnes, daughter of fromer Lt Gov Ben Barnes called into a Texas radio program being hosted by well-known host Monica Crowley.

The woman, stating that her politics differed greatly from her Fathers, stated that he informed her months ago that he was going to "go public" with this story, known to be false. She claims that he has acknowledged the untruthfulness of this story to her over the years. She claims that there are two motivations for his doing this. One, to gain publicity for a book he is writing and, 2 the desperation of the Kerry campaign at this moment in time. Apparently Barnes offered to carry this tainted water if it appeared necessary in the general election to help secure a Kerry victory."

Wow.  Those are very strong words for documents that look like amateur forgeries.

I think the White House is just looking to make whatever turns up available asap because the President is sure he's clean on the issue.

There wasn't a typewriter on earth that could do superscript like that, and only very high-end electric typewriters with the font balls could do TNR or any other proportional font. Not something you would find in a TANG backwater office. National Guard in those days was for rich fuckup kids, and nobody at the Pentagon took it seriously.

But in my opinion, these documents were designed to look like they were the originals, and that means either someone at CBS went too far for the sake of verisimultude, or CBS just committed the biggest journalistic factcheck fuckup since the Hughes Diaries.
> How could it possibly have gotten past any reputable document checker?

Ans: The Democraps want to win SO BADLY that they'd do anything, ANYTHING.

"Fueled by anger, the New Fascists have completely adopted the radical '60s notion of the "honest con." In other words, they think that because they are "correct in their beliefs" and because in their minds what they fight is so "evil," just about any act can be committed for the sake of victory - and certainly, lying is no problem." [Bob Just, "Fascism, corruption and my 'Democratic' Party" - 7/25/2000]

So they tried to FORGE documents and got openly registered Democrat Dan Rather to do a dog and pony show. That might have worked in 1992, but not today. The BLOGGERS jumpped all over it and (once again) broke a liberal media blackout on the subject.

Now that CBS is caught red handed on the documents, the NEXT hit they and the Kerry Campaign is going to be that Ben Barnes is (1) a Kerry employee and (2) willfully lying.

"A woman alleging herself to be none other than Amy Barnes, daughter of fromer Lt Gov Ben Barnes called into a Texas radio program being hosted by well-known host Monica Crowley.

The woman, stating that her politics differed greatly from her Fathers, stated that he informed her months ago that he was going to "go public" with this story, known to be false. She claims that he has acknowledged the untruthfulness of this story to her over the years. She claims that there are two motivations for his doing this. One, to gain publicity for a book he is writing and, 2 the desperation of the Kerry campaign at this moment in time. Apparently Barnes offered to carry this tainted water if it appeared necessary in the general election to help secure a Kerry victory."
http://itsjustdan.blogspot.com/2004/09/amy-barnes-speaks-out.html

It's a blog right now -- and so was the CBS document fraud just 24 hours ago.

By this time tomorrow, Barnes will be exposed as a fraud -- and he'll turn over his bosses at the Kerry Campaign.

THE ELECTION IS OVER!

And now YOU can go back to Canukistan......

John Forbes Kerry ordered it.

The Clintonistas he hired last week made it happen.

And the willing media (CBS -- for running it), the AP and Boston Globe (for assisting), and chucklehead (i.e., openly registered Democrat) Dan Rather for PERSONALLY running with it.

And the REST of the liberal media (especially PBS/NPR) for trying another "blackout" -- that ABC finally broke.

I bet Terry McAuliffe is looking real hard at a loaded pistol on his desk right about now.....

Exclusive

CBS NEWS executives have launched an internal investigation into whether its premiere news program 60 MINUTES aired fabricated documents relating to Bush's National Guard service, the DRUDGE REPORT has learned.

"The reputation and integrity of the entire news division is at stake, if we are in error, it will be corrected," a top CBS source explained late Thursday.

The source, who asked not to be named, described CBSNEWS anchor and 60 MINUTES correspondent Dan Rather as being privately "shell-shocked" by the increasingly likelihood that the documents in question were fraudulent.

Rather, who anchored the segment presenting new information on the president's military service, will personally correct the record on-air, if need be, the source explained from New York.

And that person is: John Forbes Kerry. He CANNOT escape it. It was done in HIS NAME.

This election is OVER!

http://www.hughhewitt.com/index.htm

"The transparency of the ideological bias is so overwhelming as to be funny. The spirit of Walter Duranty lives on in old media, staggering under the repeated blows of swarming bloggers armed with excellent research skills. That CBS won't reveal its sources or its experts tells us a lot about its confidence in the story. The network wants the public to trust it, but the public doesn't...

...Bold prediction: This story will help Bush. Media overkill on the story --this is round three-- underscores media bias far more than a thousand studies. Meanwhile "StolenHonor" isn't mentioned by Woodruff et al. Old media is struggling to get Kerry off the floor, and desperate Democrats are embarassing themselves in their condemnations of Bush's honorable service 30 years ago while pretending ignorance of John Kerry's odd accounts of his four months in Vietnam. Tom Harkin appeared in front of the cameras today to blast Bush's air guard service, an interesting choice since he's been John Kerry's pal in some very different but interesting circumstances as well: Kerry's mini-Munich in Managua in 1985.

But the big loser stands to be old media, revealed again as hyper-partisan and in a rush to peddle any story that it thinks will hurt a Republican --think LA Times and Arnold last year-- and to suffocate any story that could bleed a Democrat."

And then there is that bogus AP story that claimed that a Republican crowd boo-ed Clinton when Bush announced he was in the hospital.

From Powerline -- the BLOG that busted the CBS FORGERY:

http://www.powerlineblog.com/archives/007762.php

"We may be inching closer to the truth about the false Associated Press report claiming that a Republican crowd in West Allis, Wisconsin, booed the announcement that President Clinton had been hospitalized, and "President Bush did nothing to stop them."

We have an inside source who was present at the rally and is familiar with the reporters involved. Our source tells us that Tom Hays, whose byline was on the false AP report, was not at the West Allis rally. He is not one of the AP reporters assigned to cover President Bush, and is believed to have been in New York at the time.

Our source says that the AP reporter behind the story was Scott Lindlaw. Lindlaw is one of the AP reporters who cover the Bush campaign. His anti-Bush prejudices are well-known; our source has heard him say that his "mission" is to see that Bush is not re-elected.

On the day of the West Allis rally, Lindlaw was wearing ear plugs in his ears, as he often does to minimize crowd noise. After Bush's speech, he approached another AP reporter and said that he thought he had heard boos, and asked whether his colleague had heard any. The second AP reporter said that she didn't hear any booing. Nevertheless, Lindlaw apparently sent in a story, which wound up for some unexplained reason under Tom Hays' byline, which said:

Bush's audience of thousands in West Allis, Wis., booed. Bush did nothing to stop them.

We will add questions about Mr. Lindlaw to those we are directing to the Associated Press. "

"His anti-Bush prejudices are well-known; our source has heard him say that his "mission" [and every liberal/Democrat posting here] is to see that Bush is not re-elected"

And not only these obvious lies but we will show you how to lie and act like truly reprehensible Republican whores who will, cheerfully, sell out the United States for any monetary gain whatsoever.

Would you be willing to "negotiate" with any other whores this way?

Call them toll free?????

Call a spammer toll-free when it costs the spammer for every call received? That seems pretty silly.

I certainly wouldn't give a toll-free number if I were spamming -- we're talking mental retardation here.

Apparently, the Biblical law not-very-firm of  Peroutkitsch and Peroutkaski of Pasadonivitch and Gostovavitch, Communist China and the Old Soviet Untion would have one executed for spamming but all these communist slime would have us all killed anyway.

Achtung!

Let the slime eat their toll-free meat of mangey dogs an their wives.

So to speak, of course.  /me//

Ah, yes, the delusional politics of the Left.

If only they could produce a candidate with sanity, instead of with lies and trickery.  :)

Folks,
I'm getting excellent reception of the DRM signal from Deutsche Welle's DRM transmitter in Sines, Portugal in Detroit, MI on 15440 kHz at 1215 UTC using a TenTec RX-350/Butternut 80/40 Ham Vertical.

If your receiver is DRM-capable and you live in the eastern U.S., this is a good "European" catch.  There are a few dropouts, but the musical program is generally received quite well and the fidelity is excellent.

Hello all...

I have a 13 year old Sangean ATS-803A that I will "occassionally" listen to.  It's kind of hard to get into this because the only shortwave signals that I can reliably pick up are the radio stations (not the shacks).  When listening, I will often try to do some dx receiving, but usually become discouraged.  I'm considering getting a portable external antenna for it to see if this will help, but don't know where to start.  What are some of the "better" portable antennas under $100.00 that I can get for this radio, and will not overload the front end with noise?

Thx
DeWat

And when written on Microsoft Word, Times New Roman 12 pitch, printed and superimposed on the "original document" are exactly aligned.

From my local rag:

"William Flynn, a forensic document specialist with 35 years of experience in police crime labs and private practice, said the CBS documents raise suspicions because of their use of proportional spacing techniques. Documents generated by the kind of typewriters that were used widely in 1972 space letters evenly across the page, so that an i uses as much space as an m. In the CBS documents, by contrast, each letter uses a different amount of space.

Although IBM had introduced an electric typewriter that used proportional spacing by the early 1970s, it was not used widely in government. In addition, Flynn said, the CBS documents appear to use proportional spacing both across and down the page, a relatively recent innovation. Other anomalies in the documents include the use of the superscripted letters th in phrases such as "111 th Fighter Interceptor Squadron,�� Bush�s unit.

"It would be nearly impossible for all this technology to have existed at that time,�� said Flynn, who runs a document-authentication company in Phoenix.

Other experts largely concurred. Phil Bouffard, a forensic document examiner from Cleveland, said the font used in the CBS documents appeared to be Times Roman, which is widely used by word-processing programs but was not common on typewriters."

Hi DeWat,

I have the same radio. The intersting thing about it is that it is hard to overload the receiver.Modern readions have a telescopic whip and rarely can cope with exterial aerials (yes I am even referring to Sony's here as well). The 803A is a littel deaf on its whip and really needs an external aerial. You will find a longwire aerial - about 5 yards long will be fine and even better if you put it through an ATU first. Forget about elaborate expensive aerials, throw a few yards of wire acorss the room and see the huge improvement in signals.

That would be this:

A typewriter has a keyboard, with keys for the characters in its font.
The method by which the typewriter actually marks the paper now varies as greatly as types of printers do, but until the end of the 20th century was by the impact of a metal (or, later, metallized plastic) type element against an "inked" ribbon which caused ink to be deposited on the paper. Carbon paper was sometimes inserted between multiple pieces of paper, so the impact also caused duplicate characters to be printed on each layer of paper.

So which end of the 20th century did 1972 occur in?

STORYCORPS SESSIONS TO BECOME WEEKLY NPR FEATURE

Beginning Monday, Sept. 21, stories told by everyday New Yorkers in the StoryCorps recording booth located in Grand Central Station will become a regular feature on WNYC(AM), New York Public Radio during its local broadcast of NPR's "Morning Edition." In each segment, creator of StoryCorps Dave Isay will introduce one or two excerpts of stories recorded at the StoryCorps booth, a freestanding soundproof recording studio that opened in Oct. 2003 and is located in Grand Central Terminal.

Just great - ugh! This comes when I thought the Vietnam issue was fading and the real issues of this campaign might start being discussed fully.

The documents do look suspicious and the matter should be looked into so that the truth comes out. But, I think it is too soon to say that the Dems forged them. Being that it looks like they could have been faked, doesn't the way that the documents were prepared seem almost like they were intended to be discovered as fakes? If someone wanted them to be believable, why wouldn't they have used a typewriter from the period? They're still around. It just seems that there is the possibility that someone wanting to hurt the Kerry campaign could be setting his side up as being involved in a deliberate act of falsehood. I'm no fan of Kerry but someone from the right with a Carl Rove-ish mindset could have been behind getting these documents into CBS's hands knowing full well that CBS would just love to believe them. I think this scenario is plausible; after all, this is politics we're talking about here. It will be interesting to see how it plays out.

The Sony AN-LP1 is a popular portable active loop antenna that's in your general price range.

But before spending money on an antenna, it might make sense to make sure you're looking at the right times and frequencies.

Here's a link with schedules sorted by time or country.

Yep right. That's why you own press is calling to quit.

Guys, this article tells it like it is. The cost is too high for the media to ignore--they are afraid to be swallowed by the quagmire...

How Many Deaths Will It Take?

By BOB HERBERT

It was Vietnam all over again - the heartbreaking head shots captioned with good old American names:

Jose Casanova, Donald J. Cline Jr., Sheldon R. Hawk Eagle, Alyssa R. Peterson.

Eventually there'll be a fine memorial to honor the young Americans whose lives were sacrificed for no good reason in Iraq. Yesterday, under the headline "The Roster of the Dead," The New York Times ran photos of the first thousand or so who were killed.

They were sent off by a president who ran and hid when he was a young man and his country was at war. They fought bravely and died honorably. But as in Vietnam, no amount of valor or heroism can conceal the fact that they were sent off under false pretenses to fight a war that is unwinnable.

How many thousands more will have to die before we acknowledge that President Bush's obsession with Iraq and Saddam Hussein has been a catastrophe for the United States?

Joshua T. Byers, Matthew G. Milczark, Harvey E. Parkerson 3rd, Ivory

Fewer and fewer Americans believe the war in Iraq is worth the human treasure we are losing and the staggering amounts of money it is costing. But no one can find a way out of this tragic mess, which is why that dreaded word from the Vietnam era - quagmire - has been resurrected. Most Washington insiders agree with Senator John McCain, who said he believes the U.S. will be involved militarily in Iraq for 10 or 20 more years.

To what end? You can wave goodbye to the na�ve idea that democracy would take root in Iraq and then spread like the flowers of spring throughout the Middle East. That was never going to happen. So what are we there for, other than to establish a permanent military stronghold in the region and control the flow of Iraqi oil?

The insurgency in Iraq will never end as long as the U.S. is occupying the country. And our Iraqi "allies" will never fight their Iraqi brethren with the kind of intensity the U.S. would like, any more than the South Vietnamese would fight their fellow Vietnamese with the fury and effectiveness demanded by the hawks in the Johnson administration.

The Iraqi insurgents - whether one agrees with them or not - believe they are fighting for their homeland, their religion and their families. The Americans are not at all clear what they're fighting for. Saddam is gone. There were no weapons of mass destruction. The link between Saddam and the atrocities of Sept. 11 was always specious and has been proven so.

At some point, as in Vietnam, the American public will balk at the continued carnage, and this tragic misadventure will become politically unsustainable. Meanwhile, the death toll mounts.

Elia P. Fontecchio, Raheen Tyson Heighter, Sharon T. Swartworth, Ruben Valdez Jr.

One of the reasons the American effort in Iraq is unsustainable is that the American people know very little about the Iraqi people and their culture, and in most cases couldn't care less. The war in Iraq was sold as a response to Sept. 11. As it slowly dawns on a majority of Americans that the link was bogus, and that there is no benefit to the U.S. from this war, only endless grief, the political support will all but vanish.

(This could take awhile. In a poll done for Newsweek magazine this week, 42 percent of the respondents continue to believe that Saddam Hussein was directly involved in the Sept. 11 attacks.)

We've put our troops in Iraq in an impossible situation. If you are not permitted to win a war, eventually you will lose it. In Vietnam, for a variety of reasons, the U.S. never waged total war, although the enemy did. After several years and more than 58,000 deaths, we quit.

We won't - and shouldn't - wage total war in Iraq, either. But to the insurgents, the Americans epitomize evil. We're the crazed foreigners who invaded their country and killed innocent Iraqi civilians, including women and children, by the thousands. We call that collateral damage. They call it murder. For them, this is total war.

President Bush never prepared the nation for the prolonged violence of this war. He still hasn't spoken candidly about it. If he has an idea for hauling us out of this quagmire, he hasn't bothered to reveal it.

The troops who are fighting and dying deserve better.

In fact, the White House initially embraced the documents, saying they showed that Putsch was ordered to Alabama.

They seemed utterly unsurprised that new documents like these would emerge, after having sworn that all such documents had been released.

"It's the dishonesty, stupid!"

The Dishonesty Thing

By PAUL KRUGMAN

It's the dishonesty, stupid. The real issue in the National Guard story isn't what George W. Bush did three decades ago. It's the recent pattern of lies: his assertions that he fulfilled his obligations when he obviously didn't, the White House's repeated claims that it had released all of the relevant documents when it hadn't.

It's the same pattern of dishonesty, this time involving personal matters that the public can easily understand, that some of us have long seen on policy issues, from global warming to the war in Iraq. On budget matters, which is where I came in, serious analysts now take administration dishonesty for granted.

It wasn't always that way. Three years ago, those of us who accused the administration of cooking the budget books were ourselves accused, by moderates as well as by Bush loyalists, of being "shrill." These days the coalition of the shrill has widened to include almost every independent budget expert.

For example, back in February the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities accused the Bush administration of, in effect, playing three-card monte with budget forecasts. It pointed out that the administration's deficit forecast was far above those of independent analysts, and suggested that this exaggeration was deliberate.

"Overstating the 2004 deficit," the center wrote, "could allow the president to announce significant 'progress' on the deficit in late October - shortly before Election Day - when the Treasury Department announces the final figures."

Was this a wild accusation from a liberal think tank? No, it's conventional wisdom among experts. Two months ago Stanley Collender, a respected nonpartisan analyst, warned: "At some point over the next few weeks, the Office of Management and Budget will release the administration's midsession budget review and try to convince everyone the federal deficit is falling. Don't believe them."

He went on to echo the center's analysis. The administration's standard procedure, he said, is to initially issue an unrealistically high deficit forecast, which is "politically motivated or just plain bad." Then, when the actual number comes in below the forecast, officials declare that the deficit is falling, even though it's higher than the previous year's deficit.

Goldman Sachs says the same. Last month one of its analysts wrote that "the Office of Management and Budget has perfected the art of underpromising and overperforming in terms of its near-term budget deficit forecasts. This creates the impression that the deficit is narrowing when, in fact, it will be up sharply."

In other words, many reputable analysts think that the Bush administration routinely fakes even its short-term budget forecasts for the purposes of political spin. And the fakery in its long-term forecasts is much worse.

The administration claims to have a plan to cut the deficit in half over the next five years. But even Bruce Bartlett, a longtime tax-cut advocate, points out that "projections showing deficits falling assume that Bush's tax cuts expire on schedule." But Mr. Bush wants those tax cuts made permanent. That is, the administration has a "plan" to reduce the deficit that depends on Congress's not passing its own legislation.

Sounding definitely shrill, Mr. Bartlett says that "anyone who thinks we can overcome our fiscal mess without higher taxes is in denial." Far from backing down on his tax cuts, however, Mr. Bush is proposing to push the budget much deeper into the red with privatization programs that purport to offer something for nothing.

As Newsweek's Allan Sloan writes, "The president didn't exactly burden us with details about paying for all this. It's great marketing: show your audience the goodies but not the price tag. It's like going to the supermarket, picking out your stuff and taking it home without stopping at the checkout line to pay. The bill? That will come later."

Longtime readers will remember that that's exactly what I said, shrilly, about Mr. Bush's proposals during the 2000 campaign. Once again, he's running on the claim that 2 - 1 = 4.

So what's the real plan? Some not usually shrill people think that Mr. Bush will simply refuse to face reality until it comes crashing in:

Paul Volcker, the former Federal Reserve chairman, says there's a 75 percent chance of a financial crisis in the next five years.

Nobody knows what Mr. Bush would really do about taxes and spending in a second term. What we do know is that on this, as on many matters, he won't tell the truth.

The IBM Executive typewriter had proportional spacing.  It was introduced in 1941.

The IBM Selectric Composer had proportional spacing.  It was introduced in 1966.

OK, how could they release documents that had yet to be faked by someone else?

Something to think about.

That's 12 POINT, not 12 PITCH.  12 pitch is smaller (the larger the pitch, the smaller the type - and we don't use "pitch" in proportional fonts).

The "TV networks" will be all over this - ABC and NBC will jump at the chance to discredit their rival CBS.  Your imagined Konspiracy of the Left Wing Media is a fantasy.

And were drubbed soundly for it, rightfully so.  But if you're going to idict all "left-wing media" for one such story (or even several), you'll have to also look critically at the right-wing media, which is for the most part so laughable and such distortions and lies are so routine that they don't even merit much notice - it's just business as usual.

527 groups?  What do they have to do with this?  The SmearVets should be allowed to say whatever they want, as should any US citizen or group of US citizens.  The answer is not censorship and tyranically shutting down those who disagree with you - the answer is to expose them as the liars and sleaze that they are.

Your (and Bush's) totalitarian leanings are duly noted.

I haven't seen anything to indicate the White House embraced the suspect documents - afaik, they just released what they were sent in the interest of full disclosure.

While they asked to have all documents related to President Bush's National Guard service released several months ago, the fact an FOI request turned up some boring but new items earlier in the week has probably got them thinking new stuff could turn up any time before the election.

Hopefully CBS will identify the source for the documents if they're proven to be forgeries.  Would they really want to be on record as protecting a source who knowingly provided false information to them?

Yes, but that doesn't mean proportionally spaced fonts.  They could operate at 10, 12 or 15 pitch only, and only by manually setting a switch and changing the balls.  But still, each character took the same amount of width as the others on the same ball.  You press a key, the platen moved by 1 character width, which was constant.

The "th" in these documents is superscripted and a LOT smaller than the other letters.  Now, I suppose you could argue that the TANG typist stopped in mid-line, switched the balls, shifted the paper up a half a line, type "th", and then switched the balls back, shifted the paper back down a half a line and continued typing.  But that wouldn't pass the giggle test.  And besides, the "th" was not just a smaller font like 15 pitch, it was WAY smaller.

Also - even if you could rationally assert that a TANG personnel office had a typewriter that could do proportionally spaced fonts, you'll have a hard time finding one that did kerning.  And I seriously doubt that the TANG sent its routine memos out for typesetting.

Nope.  You didn't learn on proportionally spaced fonts.  Selectrics didn't do that.  You are simply misremembering.  If you think otherwise, feel free to find some documentation of a proportionally-spaced font available for an IBM Selectric.  They don't exist.

And you think the clerk typist at the TANG stopped in mid-sentence to change the ball to type a special character for "th" (if there even was such a ball - I can find no such thing) and then switch back to a Times New Roman ball (one that exactly matches the Times New Roman font available on Windows in the year 2000)?

Puh-leeze.

I know - the company I worked for in 1976 sold them - we modified them for use as computer printers.  And I don't recall ever seeing any specialized font balls with the "th" character, nor any proportinally spaced fonts.

Gawd... you do realize, don't you, how stupid you look?  Your cite doesn't support your arguments.

And how dumb you're going to look when everybody in the world - including CBS News - admits that the docs ar forgeries?

Check out the "Best shortwave political programs" thread on this group.  It

If I was limited to only one word to describe SW political programming, that word would be "conspiranoiac".

Reruns are often played when the host is taking the day off or there's technical difficulties.  They aren't always announced ahead of time.

You will miss some very informative Special Knowledge programming if you avoid the religious broadcasters.  Most of the SW conspiranoiacs believe Satan himself is at the top of all the great conspiracies.

Hello all...

I have a 13 year old Sangean ATS-803A that I will "occassionally" listen to. It's kind of hard to get into this because the only shortwave signals that I can reliably pick up are the radio stations (not the shacks). When listening, I will often try to do some dx receiving, but usually become discouraged. I'm considering getting a portable external antenna for it to see if this will help, but don't know where to start. What are some of the "better" portable antennas under $100.00 that I can get for this radio, and will not overload the front end with noise?

Thx
DeWat

I have the same radio. Hang a piece of 3/8" mesh Hardware Cloth 2'x4' from the curtain rod, behind the curtain, and connect to the folded-down rod antenna with a short flexible wire with alligator clips on each end. At my window, an S3 signal on rod becomes S9 with the mesh. k35454.

Sounded like it might be pretty good until you threw the bible into it. More preaching, eh? No thanks.

I have.  Plenty.  I used to service them.  They did NOT do proportionally spaced fonts.  They DID do different fonts, but none were proportionally spaced.  You pressed a key, the platen moved by one character width.  Period.  That's how the mechanics worked.  To change pitch, you had to set the whole typewriter into a different pitch mode.

Nope.  You are simply misremembering.  Try to find ANY cite ANYwhere that says Selectrics did proportionally spaced fonts.  You can't, because they didn't.  Selectric Composers did, but they were really considered typesetting machines and were NOT likely to be found in a TANG personnel office.

Plus, even if a 1972 typewriter DID do proportionally spaced fonts, I'll guarantee it didn't do kerning.

The really distressing thing about all this is that it is a huge distraction from what the election should really be about. All this Vietnam records stuff is about 95% bullshit - on both sides. They only value it has is in testing the veracity of the candidates NOW as they either lie about things or not.

And that makes me suspicious.

SB PROP ARL ARLP037
ARLP037 Propagation de K7RA

Sunspot numbers and solar flux rose over the past week. The average of the daily sunspot number for this week compared to the earlier seven days rose nearly 30 points to 57. Average daily solar flux was up over 16 points to 106.1. Solar flux is predicted to rise over the next few days. Predicted solar flux is 135 for Friday, September 10, and is expected to remain around 140 for the next four days or so. Fortunately, the planetary A index is expected to remain low, with predicted values over the weekend, from September 10-13 at 5, 8, 8 and 10.

Bill Burrows, WA7NCL wrote in this week saying he likes to use the K index as an indicator of whether conditions will be good when he wants to operate. You can get the current mid-latitude K index from Boulder via WWV, and it is updated every three hours.

The broadcast is at 18 minutes past each hour on WWV and 45 minutes after the hour on WWVH. You can also hear it on the phone any time at, 303-497-3235, or on the web at, http://sec.noaa.gov/ftpdir/latest/wwv.txt. I checked it just now, and the mid-latitude K index at 0600z on September 10 was 0. It doesn't get any quieter than that.

Bill sent along a great resource for predictions of the K index. It is from NOAA, and is on the web at http://www.sec.noaa.gov/rpc/costello/index.html. There are several text links on the left of the page for the predictions and also some graphs for comparing recent predictions with actual conditions. The prediction itself is on the text link called "Output List." Ideally, we would like to see a low K index along with higher sunspot and solar flux values.

This weekend is the Worked All Europe DX Contest. Conditions should be good. And don't forget the autumnal equinox in less than two weeks. As we approach Fall, HF propagation will be getting seasonally better.

If you would like to comment or have a tip, email me at, k7ra@arrl.net.

For more information concerning propagation and an explanation of the numbers used in this bulletin see the ARRL Technical Information Service propagation page at, http://www.arrl.org/tis/info/propagation.html.

Sunspot numbers for September 2 through 8 were 25, 25, 28, 59, 82, 95 and 85 with a mean of 57. 10.7 cm flux was 93.9, 96.7, 99.3, 103.2, 106.5, 118.9 and 124.5, with a mean of 106.1. Estimated planetary A indices were 9, 3, 4, 7, 14, 16 and 9, with a mean of 8.9. Estimated mid-latitude A indices were 8, 1, 2, 5, 9, 11 and 4, with a mean of 5.7.

The best were capable of proportional spacing, justification, and handling multiple fonts. The familiar IBM Executive and Selectric can be considered to be in the low-end of this family; the IBM Composing Selectric was a computer-driven, auto-justifying, high-end system.

OK, and how common was such fancy equipment in bureaucratic orginizations in which pre-printed forms were expected to be filled out with a typwriter with fixed spacing?

No they weren't, as I have pointed out in several other posts.  There has never been a Selectric (not a Composer) that could do proportionally spaced fonts.  Try as you might, you'll find no documentation that says they did.

> Do you remember those?  Avocado >green and about as heavy as a Toyota 4 cylinder engine.

Yes I do.   I used to service them in 1976.  No proportionally spaced fonts.  And they didn't do kerning.  And they didn't use the Times New Roman font that is available these days on Windows.  Typefaces are very unique - even various flavors of Times New Roman have differences.

Here's a page with type camples from various Selectric balls:

Which is proportionally spaced?  There ARE a few, but they were for the Selectric Composer, which was more of a typesetting machine and not likely to be in a TANG office used for routine memos.

And which matches the typeface in the memos?  A Selectric came with the Courier as standard, and it most closely matches Times New Roman, but it's not proportional.  Boldface was proportional, but it's not the typeface in the memos.

Problem is, checking the typeface in the memos against any known typeface available at the time is not that difficult, and it will prove beyond any doubt that the memos were not produced on a 1972-era typewriter.  These forgeries are not going to hold up.  So arguing that there might have been a proportionally spaced font available on a 1970-model Olivetti typewriter produced in Italy or something is moot if the typefaces available don't exactly match the type in the memos.

> I went to a poor
>high school and each of the two typing classrooms had twenty of them.

I'm not impressed.  Who are you going to believe - CBS and their anonymous "independent" "experts", or your own lying eyes?  Just look for yourself.  Those docs were NOT produced on a typewriter in 1972.

>  That's either an outright lie, or the experts had to >have come from a night job at Wendy's.

I thought I read somewhere that their "experts" were HANDWRITING experts - and they were just "authenticating" the signature.  I don't think they even considered the typography.

>  It's a little hard for me to believe >that even a rookie document authenticator wouldn't be looking for that kind

Me too.  But an article in the American Spectator (I know, I know - right wing rag and not particularly reliable, but take this with a grain of salt and weight it as you wish, the truth will eventually come out) claims that these memos have been floating around for many months but nobody would touch them because they are so obviously fake.
But Dan Rather got a bug up his butt and pushed it through, over the objections of other CBS people.

I read that elsewhere as well - that this 60 Minutes story only got on the air because Dan Rather personally pushed it over other people's objections.  If so, his career is (and should be) toast.

The truth will come out, and I don't think it's going to be pretty.

Look closely.  Look at serifs, spacing, etc.

What I learned on was definitely NOT a composer.  Looking at some photos, it's obvious that I learned on a selectric II.

under the bridge.  I'm sure now I learned on a Selectric II.  If you serviced them, you'd know what they were capable of, so that's that.

I'm always curious about people's antennas, though they often go unmentioned here. So, what's in your back yard (or on your roof, or in your attic....)?

None of these are proportionally spaced.  None of them have a "th", "nd", "st", etc. character. The Composer didn't do kerning.  And none of the available fonts matches the font used in the memos.

ROTFL!!!  As if any clerk/typist would do so in a routine memo.
Jeeze...

Aside from which, the "th" in the memos is even too small for the smallest available Selectric font.

You never produced the kind of "th" that is in these memos in the early 70's.  Look at the documents yourself - you obviously have not seen them if you're arguing that they could have been made by rolling the platen a little bit and switching the type ball.

The main "critique" of these documents seems to be the superscript th and the proportionate spacing. Some of the "official" and unquestioned documents released by the Bush White House earlier this year also have superscript th and proportionate spacing. So either all these documents are fakes, in which case the White House has released fake documents and called them real, or all the documents are real, in which case Bush defied a direct order and pressure was placed "from above" to "sugar coat" his evaluation.

100 metres/110 yards of wire is on the house on the eves, held up by Xmas light holders. It's just speaker wire (what was available) and has been there for about 4 years now. Connected to a balan and grounded. Works very well. Listening with an Icom R75, ATS404, YB400, but mostly the Icom with this antenna.

I made one of those "broomstick" antennas and have it in the attic. So-so results. In process of setting up 100' longwire in back yard.

Agreed.  Try various wire lengths and pick what works.  Overloading may or may not be a problem depending on where your live, e.g., middle of the N Amer continent generally doesn't get overloaded.  I have among my collection an ATS 909 and 505, YB400, YB300, none subject to overload on fairly long wires.  Though strong signals (e.g, BBC, RN) are not improved

Perhaps we could revert completely to more historical names like Radical and Reactionary, or Spiders and Bees.  (If you know the classic literary reference for the latter, you get 10 points and a gold star.)

That's been pointed out to me.  I bow on this issue.  SemiScholar has very kindly supplied a site that will show actual typefacing examples.  I was speaking out of my own memory of how different the "look" was between the Olympia manual models and the IBM Selectric II that I learned to type on in high school.  Blame it on age and poor memory.  Although there is a huge difference in the look, it seems to me now that the difference is due to the fact that the old manuals weren't able to make a line of type even, top to bottom, whereas the 'ball' on the selectric made for a neater look.  Superscripts were also available as a function on [at least] the Selectric II, but [As again, SemiScholar pointed out] they weren't able to 'kern' the typesetting.

This business about the documents that the White House released being "exactly" like the CBS 'uncovered documents' intrigues me, though.  Since they ALL would have been produced at approximately the same time, I would have to wonder why they all look the same.

Additionally, I've posted an article on the dispute quoting one expert as saying that she was able to produce an exactly similar document using her own word processing equipment.  I just wish they had said something about the rest of the examination of the actual document.  If there were no impact marks on the paper, it would have been conclusive evidence [it seems to me] that NO typewriter of any kind produced the documents.

Aging paper is not that difficult, but you can't produce a typewritten document without a typewriter without missing the indentation of the ball or strikers or whatever that a typewriter produces.  Even after many years, a magnifying glass would reveal that much.

It's already connected to the Kerry campaign. Who do you think CBS got the docs from in the first place?

Kerry is toast.

More than likely the document would have been typed on a cheap lowest-bidder typewriter by an E-3 following a standard format.  The idea a selectric would have been used for a routine document is silly.

No, no, no. Please pay attention. Everyone knows that these documents represent a gigantic plot cooked up by the evil mastermind Karl Rove to discredit the Democrats and the media. And if you don't believe that, wait a few minutes and we'll be hearing plenty from the loonies who do.

Amateur Radio Newsline™ Report 1413 – September 10, 2004

Amateur Radio Newsline report number 1413 with a release date of Friday, September 10th, 2004 to follow in 5-4-3-2-1.

The following is a Q-S-T.

Hurricane Frances strikes Florida and ham radio is prepared. Hear the ham radio first responders in action on Amateur Radio Newsline report number 1413 coming your way right now.

RESCUE RADIO: HURRICANE FRANCES VS. HAM RADIO

Hurricane Frances pounded Florida with high wind and heavy rain after it smashed across the state's East coast. Close to 4 million residents lost power and telephone service. Cellular phone networks that survived Frances’s gale force winds quickly became overloaded. Enter ham radio. Amateur Radio Newsline’s David Black, KB4KCH has been following the story from our South-East bureau in Birmingham, Alabama:

When Hurricane Frances hit Florida on Labor Day weekend, the storm ripped roofs off buildings, toppled trees and cut power to about 4 million people. Also lost was part of the states telephone and cellular service. This created a communications vacuum.

But hams affiliated with SATERN - the Salvation Army Team Emergency Radio Network, A-R-E-S, and the Hurricane Watch Net were expecting Frances. Radio amateurs had been tracking this storm as it ravaged its way across the Caribbean. And it was ham radio that let the world know of the destruction the giant storm had caused as it hit some of the islands:

“Roger roger. On Elutheria Ill say about 40 percent of the structures have damage. In the Rainbow Bay area where I live I would say about 70% of the hhomes here have structural damage. Over.”

Once a Category 4 hurricane with winds of 145 mph, Frances had weakened to a Category 2 storm as it neared Florida. Winds dropped to a peak of 105 mph as it made landfall at Sewall's Point, north of Palm Beach, around 1 a.m. Eastern Daylight Time on Saturday, September 4th. Ham radio operators affiliated with the Hurricane Watch Net tracked its approach:

--

“This is KA5E with the Hurricane Watch Net. We are currently taking measured weather reports out of the affected area for Hurricane Frances. Do I have any stations on with pdates or signifigant weather reports. KA5E, over.”

--

The powerful storm hit Florida with ferocious winds and sheets of rain. The hurricane was so large and slow moving that its western outer edges had began arriving on the east coast on Saturday morning. On Sunday morning its eastern edges were still pounding the coast from which 2.5 million people had been told to flee. Repeaters interconnected using I-R-L-P and Echolnk were pressed into service to help coordinate the latest round of evacuations:

“KC4PNC KB1CYO net control. Go ahead sir,”

“They have called for mandatory evacuation for Hillsboro county for manufactured homes and also mobile homes. They have not ordered a mandatory for low lieing areas but they are strongly recommendng it.”

And as evacuee’s poured into shelters, communications volunteers were needed. A call was put out over the interlinked repeater network and the hams responded

“We are looking for any volunteerr Amateur Radio operators to help with shelters. We have eight shelters open right now. Those are being manned. However, since its a declared evacuation all of the other shelters will be opened and we are looking for vlunteers to man those shelters. KC4PNC.”

As Frances path of destruction hit Florida's central Atlantic coast counties, blinding rain squalls drove clouds of sand into the air. At the same time high waves thundered onto the beaches. One ham watched as his rain gage was torn away and white caps pounded ashore:

“Any kind of rainfall accumulation?”

“No, that gage blew away but I can tell you that we are in a high tide area right now and I can see the tides up about a foot and a half and I have water coming over my seawall. But its not a problem. We are still at a much higher elevation. The water is over the seawall along the Intercoastal Waterway.”

As palm trees rained coconuts and then toppled over and buildings suffered extensive damage there was also a tragedy at sea.  And the U-S Coast Guard turned to Amateur Radio for help:

“I want to remind the net that the Coast Guard has asked us to lend assistance in the search for the Anna Marie.  It is a vessel that went down off the coast of Sarasota this evening about 10 to 12 miles out.  Any assistance or any information on the Anna Marie that went down with the crew 10 o 12 miles out of Sarasota, the U.S. Coast Guard would appreciate your assistance.”

--

At airtime its not known what happened to the Anna Marie nor the fate of its crew.  But as the search continued, there was yet another threat.  Early on Sunday the 5th, the massive weather system spawned a tornado, and the warning went out over the I-R-L-P ham radio network:

--

“The tornado is expected to be by Bostwick by by 2:45 Eastern, Forholm by 3:00 a.m.  and thats all I have.”

As that twister touching down the National Weather Service office in Jacksonville issued a tornado warning for Northern Clay County including the city of Orange Park.  Also affected were St. Johns, Clay, and Putnam Counties.  And as dawn was breaking radar picked up a developing tornado near Doctors Inlet moving West at 45 mph.  Only some damage to roofs was reported.

But reporting weather was not the only chore radio amateurs were involved in.  Another as health and welfare.  Letting worried relatives and friends know about those stuck in Frances path.  Many like this central American station who was happy to hear that the hurricane was headed away from his daughters location:

“OK.  Great. Thank you very much.  I appreciate that information.  We are here in a location where we do not have any TV or any other communication.  We are on the beach on the West coast of Panama.  So thanks very much I do appreciate it.  This is HB1XRO and the handle is Bob.”

--

By Monday afternoon, Frances had crossed the eastern Gulf of Mexico and made its second landfall in Florida's northwest Panhandle section some 20 miles south of Tallahassee.  Now it only a tropical storm with sustained wind near 65 mph.  Damage was mainly to power and telephone lines.  At that point the forecasters were predicting the storm would move north-northwest at about 8 mph, and was not expected to regain hurricane strength.

Frances soaked Georgia, dumping 11 inches of rain in a 24 hour period in the town of Patterson.

Media reports blame Frances for at least seven deaths in Florida, including two people who were killed Saturday when the roof of he building they were in collapsed. There were also two deaths in the Bahamas. One of these was a teenager who was reportedly electrocuted when he tried to hook up a generator to a power mains that was still on.

With thanks to the hams who supplied the storm audio over the Internet used in this report, I’m David Black, KB4KCH at the South-East bureau in Birminham Alabama for the Amateur Radio Newsline. (ARNewsline(tm))

RESCUE RADIO: HAM RADIO PREPARES FOR IVAN

And its not over yet. As we go to air Hurricane Ivan is making its way cross the Caribbean and could strike the United States. CQ's newsdesk reports that Amateur Radio at the National Hurricane Center, WX4NHC, was to be reactivated for Hurricane Ivan at 2 PM EDT Thursday, Sept. 9, and will be active on Friday-Sunday 8 AM-11 PM EDT. The Hurricane Center will be on the Hurricane Watch Net on 20 meters as well as the VoIP Hurricane Net,. The latter is a combination of IRLP and Echolink stations.

The Cayman Islands and Jamaica are the next locations in the path of this extremely dangerous Category V Hurricane which now has maximum sustained winds of 160 MPH per the latest advisory issued at 5 AM EDT Thursday morning.

VoIP Net Control Station Rob Macedo, KD1CY, says they are trying to coordinate with the IRLP node owners on the Cayman Islands and Jamaica on usage of their nodes and liaisons to those affected areas. Currently there are no Echolink or IRLP nodes in Cuba.

National Hurricane Center advisories indicate that the path of Hurricane Ivan is not clear after it passes over Cuba on Sunday. Residents in the affected area should monitor the situation closely. There is a possibility that the hurricane's forward progress could slow and emergency nets may be activated for an extended period of time. It also means that ham radio communications volunteers could have a lot more to do in the coming days. (CQ)

RESCUE RADIO:  FIRST RESPONDERS SAY THEY NEED INTEROPERABILITY

Meantime, three years after the nine eleven terrorist attacks, thousands of police and fire divisions in cities and counties across the United States still do not have coordinated communications capabilities.  So says the First Response Coalition and Amateur Radio Newslines Norm Seeley, KI7UP, has the details:

The First Response Coalition calls this lack of interoperability an unresolved national crisis and it has decided to take on the FCC and big business to solve it.  This as the organization reaches out directly to more than 43,000 local police and fire officials to solicit their help.

First Response wants Congress to overturn the FCC decision to award spectrum to Nextel in favor of a plan that deals both with interference problem and the interoperability crisis.  Gene Stilp, who is the First Response Coalition coordinator says that the FCC plan involving Nextel is wrong for police officers and firefighters.  This is because it only takes on only part of the interference issue.  Moreover, it does not do anything about the lack of interoperability between emergency response groups.

The First Response Coalition says that this outreach program is getting a very favorable grassroots response.  So far over 17 fire chiefs have joined ranks with the group in opposing the FCC's current plan for what they call a give away of taxpayer-owned spectrum.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I‘m Norm Seeley, KI7UP.

About the only emergency responders these days who have full two way radio interoperability are radio amateurs. Hams had voluntarily set world-wide communications standards many years ago.  (First Response Coalition release)

RESCUE RADIO:  AMBER ALERT LINKS UP TO THE WEB

The nation's Amber Alert system has become a web available tool.  This, thanks to a portal made available by the E2C company of Scottsdale, Arizona.

Until now, Amber Alerts have been a primarily radio based  technology.  This meant that messages had depended on the nation's Emergency Alert system for relay and delivery. The new Web-based system can process and transmit the same emergency information more quickly and make it available to a wider variety of devices. It also comes with software that pinpoints the location of a child abduction and sends out emergency notification targeted to that geographic area.

As of now, Amber Alert managers in 11 states have access to the new portal. Use of the system is expected to expand to the 49 states that have statewide Amber Alert systems. Hawaii has no statewide system but has several local alert networks. (E2C)

THE BPL FIGHT: VK 4-WHEELERS JOIN BPL FIGHT

A Four Wheel Drive hobby group has joined the fight against BPL. Its happening down-under. WIA Newscaster Phil Waite ,VK2DKN, reports:

The VKS737 4WD HF Radio Network, joined the fight against BPL last week, following the recent WIA news broadcast by Jim Linton, VK3PC, highlighting the BPL industry's attack on interference protection for so called `recreational radio services' and an approach from WIA Director, Glen Dunstan, VK4DU.

VKS737 are currently circulating their members with information about the threat BPL poses to their activities, and encouraging their members to lobby politicians on the issue.

The VKS737 network is used extensively for emergency communications in remote areas, as well as serving the communications needs of outback travellers. Their current membership is around 7,000 and they potentially reach 250,000 Australian 4WD owners.

Many of their network base stations are in urban areas potentially affected by BPL and VKS737 members are rightly concerned about the threat presented to their HF communications. Their organisation is also associated with the Australian Citizens Emergency Radio network, who provide similar services on citizens band frequencies.

Phil Waite, VK2DKN, for the WIA National News.

The Wireless Institute of Australia is discussing ways the two organizations can assist each other in the fight against BPL. (WIA News)

INTRUDER WATCH: STRANGE SIGNALS AT 7238 KHZ

According to Bob Gonsett, W6VR, for the past three weeks, hams in the southwestern U.S. have been reporting a mysterious signal in the 40-meter band. One party described it as a "mechanical sound." Another speculated that it was "data."

Engineers at Communications General Corporation in Fallbrook California took a quick look at the situation on Septeember 6th. And at 3:20 P-M Pacific Daylight Savings Time the company found several close-spaced CW carriers. The four strongest signals at CGC's lab were on 7238.063, 7238.150, 7238.237 and 7238.412 kHz. The signal on .237 was the strongest of the group and the frequencies reported should each be accurate to better than plus or minus 30 Hz.

Communications General says it is not sure if the signal was coming from one specially modulated transmitter or from transmitters at different locations. Bob Gonsett adds that it will be interesting to learn the source or sources of these transmissions. (W6VR, CGC)

SAFETY: RADIO ENGINEER ELECTROCUTED WHILE WORKING ALONE AT TOWER SITE

The hazards of working near power lines has been brought front and center again. This with word that a Wyoming broadcast engineer has killed while working at a transmitter site in Colorado.

Thirty nine year old Robin Bradley Thomas was killed while working alone, trying to install a radio transmitter. The accident happened about 18 miles northwest of Red Feather Lakes in northern Colorado. Indications are that Thomas of Cheyenne died when he accidentally came in contact with high-voltage and was electrocuted. Thomas was described as an experienced engineer who contracted out his services. (CGC)

RADIO LAW: CELLPHONE PROVIDERS SUED OVER LOCKED PHONES

A consumer watchdog group sued three cellular telephone companies. This. for "locking" their phones to make it harder for customers to switch carriers.

The Foundation for Taxpayer and Consumer Rights is the group that filed the suit in Los Angeles. It accuses AT&T Wireless Services Inc., T-Mobile USA Inc. and Cingular Wireless, of using software in their handsets that prevents them from being used on a competitors' network.

All phones in question use Global System Mobile communications, or GSM technology which effectively limits a handset to a specific carrier using a non interchangeable SIM card. The lawsuit complains that this is an unfair and deceptive business practice under California state law.

The phone companies are defending their policy. They say that they routinely subsidize handset cost and would loose substantial revenue if they allowed customers to easily use those phones with another carrier. (Foundation for Taxpayer and Consumer Rights)

REPEATER COORDINATION: METROCOR MORITORIUM TO END DECEMBER 15

Attention repeater owners in the New York metro and surrounding area. An impoerant deadline is aproaching.

You may remember that your new area frequency coordinator MetroCor had put in place a two year moritorium on new co-channel coordinations when the group came into being. It had also asked existing repeater operators who have documented proof of expired coordination from the now defunct Tri State Amateur Repeater Council to update their coordinations with MetroCor.

In a posting to QRZ.com, MetroCor's Mario Sellitti, N2PVP, says that this moratorium had minimized the possibility that new coordinations might inadvertently displace longstanding users of the spectrum. It also helped to avoid creating disputes where none previously existed.

Now, says Sellitti, this period must now come to an end. He says that MetroCor will be terminating the moratorium as of midnight, Saturday, December 15th.

But he adds this qualifier. Sellitti says that anyone in the area having a repeater or knowing of one belonging to another ham, and that repeater qualifies for this exception, to please refer to MetroCor’s on-line F-A-Q in item No. 11. This will give you or the person with the other machine the information needed to gain new coordination through MetroCor. Those in need will find it on-line at www.metrocor.net/faq.htm. HAM TECHNOLOGY: HAM DREAM DIGITAL VOICE QSO

What is believed to be the first two-way digital voice contact in South Africa took place between ZS1AN and ZS1AU on August 10th. Contact was made on 15 meters with both amateurs using Ham Dream software for the QSO. Amateur Radio Newsline's Bruce Tennant, K6PZW has the details:

Ham Dream is an open-source version of the Digital Radio Mondiale broadcasting standard. It was adapted for amateur use by HB9TLK and gives hams the ability to talk almost noise free. Here's how.

Speech is converted to digital data using a low-bitrate vocoder analog to digital converter. The data is then transmitted using a high-speed modem. At the receiving end the data is decoded to recover the audio at the receiver. Although still in the evelopment stages, there is worldwide interest in Digital Voice, which can deliver very high signal-to-noise ratios over medium quality narowband S-S-B channels.

For those who want to experiment, HamDream software can be downloaded free of charge from the South African Radio League's website at www.sarl.org.za.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, Im Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, reporting.

Further information on digital voice in ham radio is available on HB9TLK's website. Its in cyberspace at www.qsl.net/hb9tlk (GB2RS)

EMERGING TECHNOLOGY: TiVO OVER THE NET

Federal regulators have approved technology allowing TiVo subscribers to send copies of recorded shows over the Internet. In its decision, the Federal Communications Commission said the new feature by Alviso, Calif.-based TiVo has enough protections in place to prevent mass distribution of copyrighted material.

The technology would allow a TiVo subscriber to download broadcasts to a computer and send copies of recorded shows over the Internet to an office or home or to a small circle of friends, as long as they are on the subscriber's registered account. The Motion Picture Association of America, the National Football League and others complained that the new service would allow the 1.6 million TiVo subscribers to redistribute shows over the Internet to virtually anyone, anywhere. ## EMERGING TECHNOLOGY: FCC TAKES NEXT STEPS TO PROMOTE DIGITAL TV TRANSITION

Its full speed ahead with the conversion to digital television. So says the FCC as it issues a Report and Order that it says implements several steps necessary for the "continued progress of the conversion of the nation's television broadcast system from analog technology to digital television.

The paper covers almost every aspect of the conversion process over the next several years. It also highlights the coming events and should be considered "must reading" for those interested or involved in the future of digital T-V. You will find it on-line at http://hraunfoss.fcc.gov/edocs_public/attachmatch/DOC-250542A1.doc (CGC, FCC)

WORLDBEAT: NEW UK REPEATER SERVES LONDON AND KENT

And if you are planning a trip to the UK, don’t forget your reciprocal license and your HT. And be sure to try out a new repeater serving the needs of hams in the North Kent and South East London England area.

Its call is GB3OK and it is sponsored by the Bromley Repeater Group and it went on the air on the 16th of August. It transmits on 145.650 MHz with the standard 600 Kilohertz input offset and requires a 103.5Hz tone to access the receiver. The trustee of GB3OK or repeater keeper as the British call them is Tony Ravelini, G1HIG, in the city of Kent. (GB2RS)

DX

In DX, HA3JB tells the Ohio Penn D-X Newsletter that he will operate as SU8BHI from Cairo, Egypt. This, from September 21st through December 20th. Activity will include CW, PSK, RTTY, SSTV and some SSB. QSL direct to HA3JB. (OPDX)

And UA9OBA, has been active as JT100M. This is a special callsign being used until September 13th during the Mongolian leg of the Altay-Himalaya Transasian off-road expedition.  Activity has been mainly on 20 meters SSB around 14.180 Mhz. QSL via UA9OBA. (OPDX)

THAT FINAL ITEM: THA FINAL ITEM:  A KEYLESS T-HUNT

And finally this week, a Michigan ham radio operator from the Ford Motor Company was part of a two man team that has solved the mystery of malfunctioning remote keyless car door openers, garage door openers and other such devices in Las Vegas, Nevada.  A problem with R-K-E devices that had baffled many residents since a massive outage began last February.

Las Vegas resident Bill Zawistowski was one of those complaining.  He and others vented their frustration to anyone who would listen including the FCC. Ford responded by flying in two R-F detectives.  Earl Morse, N8SS, represented the auto maker and Nabil Hachem was from Alps Automotive, which makes the keyless car-door devices.  And it did not take very long for Morse and Hachem to figure out what was happening:

Morse: “When we got there we discovered a signal in the paassband of the RKE receivers which was actually strong enough to keep the RKE from activating its own receiver in the vehicles.  We investigated further and found it to be a stuck repeater.  We can leave it at that.”

--

Morse says it was not much different than a ham radio T-hunt except for the frequency:

--

Morse: “Having experienced Fox Hunting first hand. the only difficult art was shifting all my equipment to that frequency.  All of my antennas were relatively useless because they were cut to 2 meters an 440 so we had to make some new antennas for the 315 Mhz. band.”

“We did have one advantage in that the RKE group had purchased a Doppler direction finder and we utilized that a lot.”

Morse tells Amateur Radio Newsline that once they found the transmitter it only took a few phone calls to get it turned off.  The problem did surface again a week later but this time one landline call got it to go QRT for good. (ARNewsline (tm))

See my "Breaking News" post.  Considering what you've just written, the announcement by the White House, that they have no plans to independently authenticate the documents seems extremely suspicious.

Jeff White of WRMI writes: "As of tonight, a lot of the WRN hours that we carry are going to be replaced by Brother Stair, who has purchased 0400-0900 UTC seven days a week on 6870, plus 1200-1400 UTC Monday-Friday on 15725. This will obviously affect a lot of the WRN relays we have been carrying from various stations, including RNW. We will still carry WRN on weekend mornings and afternoons as before."

Radio Netherlands will therefore be heard on Sat/Sun ONLY at 1200-1300 UTC on 15725 kHz. This is not an "official" relay, so does not appear in our published schedule.

Yes - that intrigues me as well.  I'd like to see some examples of it.

The documents that CBS published were obviously photocopied repeatedly or probably even faxed at least onde.  They're not very high quality.
That leads me to believe that CBS doesn't have the originals.

There are many questions about this that need to be answered.  One such question is:  given how easily these documents were discovered to be fakes, and assuming that the fact it would look bad for the Kerry campaign if a dirty trick like this were exposed, who was it that actually created and pushed the fake documents?

We need to know ALL the answers.

Additionally, did you see where someone was saying that one of the letters in Kerry's file leading to his being awarded was also suspected to be a fake?  Don't ask me to cite this.  I can't.  I just saw in passing yesterday.

It seems to me that ALL of these documents ought to be given some kind of vetting by people who are experts on that kind of thing.  Look at you.  You serviced the IBMs and the discrepancy was obvious to you.  It just seems almost unbelievable that the parties in question wouldn't have people with some kind of expertise examine these documents.

There are two documents available at <http://www.drmrx.org/receiver_mods.html> which should get you a lot further already. The Fraunhofer mod was quite a bit more complex, but the document contains a nice mixer circuit (a more inexpensive version of which is discussed in the second document). Here in .de a finished mixer board as sold by Sat-Service Schneider <http://home.t-online.de/home/sat-service/sat/DRM/DRM.htm> is quite popular, mostly in the crystal version. Very small thing it seems (thus popular for portable rx mods), and they've got a PDF with the circuit, too. All you'd need in addition to that would be a small case with a 3.5 mm headphone jack and a cable (as short as possible) with a matching DIN plug for the IF output jack.

This morning, I heard the first radio report of the Shrub's newly

In contrast, none of the radio reports I've heard about the Swifties

One 70' wire running N-S, and one 200' wire running W-E. Both are transformer matched, with the co-ax feed buried running to the house.

Yeah.  That's a recurring problem with the "liberal-controlled" media in this country.

I'm at least as suspicious of the claim that someone could print out a document using Word and an unspecified printer and make it look exactly the same as the documents in question. Though standardization in equipment is stronger than it used to be, printers (especially printers that have been heavily used) produce small differences among themselves.

Works for me. If Dan Rather gets embarrassed, so much the better.

which was somehow written in proportional font with 13-point spacing, probably on a laser printer using Microsoft Word, none of which was possible during Killian's lifetime.

dxAce correctly recalled Dick Bash. It was the Bash guides that actually matched the real test questions on the exams. The ARRL manuals made up their own questions that were very similar and gave a person adequate practice to handle the test; the difference was that you could memorize the answers to the Bash questions and pass the test without understanding the material. That is, if the answer to the Bash question about resonant frequency was "(c) 1.4 MHz", then the answer to the actual test question would also be (c), 1.4 MHz.

It was said at that time that the reason the FCC dumbed the test down by orders of magnitude was directly and mostly related to the Bash guides. That, and the fact that amateur radio was acquiring General Class licensees who couldn't explain how a flashlight worked or tune a transmitter, made the Bash guides a source of a lot of resentment among amateurs.

The really big problem is that Microsoft didn't have a spreadsheet program until after (or at least VERY close to) Killian's death. Microsoft Word didn't appear until around 1983.

Most likely these documents were made by someone who wasn't alive during the time Killian was alive.

For receiving, an active loop on a rotator - it has a very deep null which is useful. Mounted in the attic atm for testing, but due to be moved to the bottom of the garden further away from all the tv/computer etc interference. It feeds the receivers via a 4-way multi-coupler.

I can also use the ham antennas if I want to.

I have just bought a Sony SW55. I am generally very impressed with the radio in terms of both performance for a small portable and build quality. However , I am experiencing a problem regarding SSB which is not related to warm up drift or the SSB "warble" problem.

When I tune to a known stable frequency such as the weather Volmet transmission on 5.505MHz USB , around 50% of the time the radio is more or less spot on frequency and you can tune across the signal in the normal way. However , at other times when I switch on I need to tune down 1KHz to 5.504MHz to resolve the signal and as I tune across the signal I can again resolve clear audio another 1 KHz lower on 5.503MHz - its as if there are 2 spots to resolve the signal as you tune across it!. Sometimes I can switch off the radio and switch on again and I am back to spot on frequency of 5.505 - other times I need to rest the radio overnight before it will come back onto frequency.

I wonder if anybody else has experienced this problem? Hopefully its an alignment problem or something simple. Does anybody know any fix or whether there is a Sony radio "frequent faults and fixes" web site.

Martin

It apparently has to do with St. Ignatius. Easy enough to look up.

You can keep your gold star, I have a feeling it's fool's gold.

Here's an example: Les Locklear fax's me fake documents. I release said documents to the public, indicating that they came from Les Locklear.

How does/or would that make me responsible in any way for the fact that they were fakes?

Very true.  And very exasperating.  Kerry should be absolutely pounding Bush.  Bush has nothing to brag about, his record is one of dismal and abject failure.  But I don't see Kerry doing an effective job at this.

Actually, Kerry HAS been talking about a lot of Bush's failures - but it's not coming through in the media so well.  The media is more interesting in these meaningless little squabbles.

I saw something vague about it, but probably on usenet, so I don't count it for much.  But if there are any fake documents on either side

Indeed.  But from what I have read, most parties DID look at the docs and decide not to pursue them.  I have heard that they have been floating around for many months, being shopped all over the place, but nobody would touch them because they concluded they were fakes, or at least too suspicious.

Until Dan Rather decided to grab them and run with them.

At this point in time it may be a good idea for Dan Rather to grab his ass and hold on.

I've found it and posted it at the end of this...just FYI.  Make of it what you will.

In that case, the sooner Rather gets run through the closest paper shredder the better.  This is just ridiculous and it's keeping us from being able to concentrate on really important election issues like whether or not Theresa Heinz-Kerry should have said that anyone who wouldn't like Kerry's Health proposal is an idiot.

I heard the other day that the Dept. of Defense was investigating the letter in Kerry's folder supposedly written by former Navy Secretary John Lehman.  Since he denied having written it, there seems to be an explanation needed.  One commentator on TV said if it turns out to be a planted document, that this would just about end his campaign.  We shall see.

The Guardian points out that the White House has doctored Bush's records:

"White House officials also could not explain the final two entries of Bush's official flight logs that refer to him being assigned to work as an instructional pilot in late May 1972 at a Texas Air National Guard base. Bush left the base for Alabama before the two dates listed on the flight logs and his records show he wasn't paid for work on those dates.

The logs have a code indicating the assignments were eventually deleted from his official records. White House spokeswoman Claire Buchan said the entries could have been a paperwork error. "

Maybe they don't want to open that Pandora's box.

MSH,

FWIW:  In the news today the guy's wife is claiming that the Bush Military Records ?documents? that are attributed to her dead husband appear to be "FAKES".

*  His widow, Marjorie Connell, told ABC News Radio:
"The wording in these documents is very suspect to me.
I just can't believe these are his words."

*  "Col Killian's son, Gary Killian, who also served in the National Guard, said he doubted his father would have written an unsigned memo which said there was pressure to "sugar coat"
Mr Bush's performance review.

*  Rufus Martin, the personnel chief in Col Killian's unit at the time also said he believed the documents are fake.
"They looked to me like forgeries. I don't think Killian would do that, and I knew him for 17 years," he said.

*  Independent document examiner Sandra Ramsey Lines said the memos appeared to have been written on a computer with Microsoft Word software.

*  Ms Lines, a document expert and fellow of the American Academy of Forensic Sciences, highlighted a small superscript "th" in the words "111th Fighter Interceptor Squadron".  She said such an effect was created automatically with Microsoft Word.  "I'm virtually certain these were computer generated," she said.

*  Bill Flynn, one of US's top authorities on document authentication, added:  "These documents do not appear to have been the result of technology that was available in 1972 and 1973."

No. I've seen the contrary arguments, and they're about 95% bullshit. They are things like "well, you could scroll the paper up and type the 'th'" and "IBM Selectrics could print proportional type" (which is not true, but it is also irrelevant, because IBM none of the IBM Selectric fonts I've seen match the ones in the documents - but Windows' version of Times New Roman does).

I have really not seen any valid arguments supporting the authenticity of these documents. And without getting into any of the content of these documents, I am convinced, knowing what I do about typewriters of that era and subsequent computer typography, that those documents were NOT produced on a typewriter in 1972.

Okay - just for grins I did it myself - typed the whole memo in.  All the line breaks are the same, but only when using Times New Roman or one of the related Roman fonts, like Nimbus Roman No9.  But the memo does NOT use the same version of Times New Roman that's on my Windows 2000 machine.

So I don't know what machine it WAS produced on, but I remain convinced it WASN'T produced on a typewriter in the early 1970's.

I just saw a CNN report on Blitzer that typewriters were capable of doing all this in the time period.  Still, consider what you just said!  Would someone typing a MEMO go through all the gyrations necessary to produce what we've seen.  Come on!

I think you have to be right at this point.  There's just too much wrong with these documents.  Also, you're right about the selectric.  The type looks different on a Selectric II but it's not proportional.

That pic was taken in 2001 when I first installed the system here, and the shot is from the end of the 100' W-E wire, looking west. That wire has now been extended another 100'. I need to take another pic which I'll do this Fall.

How much lead-in coax you using? My backyard is quite similar to yours. I was going to put my wire on the neighbors chainlink fence which runs the length of the yard, but the posts may work better.

Well, one might start with the after action reports he submitted for the medals he received.

He would be if the election was about issues.

I don't think Presidential elections are primarily about issues.

That's why I was disappointed during the Primaries that the mainstream press adopted the line that Kerry was "electable" while Dean and Clark were not.  It's not that I preferred either candidate, but national elections are determined by image and I thought (still think) that either of those two could have done a better job running an image-centered modern pit-bull campaign.

Kerry just looked like another DLC drone.  I think a bit more highly of him now than last Spring, but not much more.

In light of the demonstrated behavior of the mainstream press over the last decade or so, I'm not sure anyone could be effective at this.

They have their story - the Shrub is a steadfast leader, Kerry is a dull flip-flopper - and they're sticking to it.

><sigh>  Yes.  So much for "liberal media".

A neighbor attended the local Democratic caucus last Spring.  She talked with an emigre from the XSSR who said, "At least in Russia everyone knew the press was lying to us."

I suspect this level of consciousness will eventually penetrate the American mind, though I doubt it will be in my lifetime.

Proof that KERRY submitted the after action report?

I think about 75% of the claims of the forgery advocates are bullshit, too.

Any claim based on examining documents on computer screens, or on comparisons on TV that "look the same", or rely on documents printed with the "default MS Word settings", or that two copies of a very brief document have breaks between words in the same place, can be safely ignored.

Determination of forgery is not that easy.

>I have really not seen any valid arguments supporting the authenticity >of these documents.

The best possible argument is that they don't look like forgeries.
Most (though not all) of the reasons why they are forgeries are not convincing.  That leaves a small number of reasons to be taken seriously.

The second best possible argument is that the evidence is not sufficient.  This is the argument that the CBS documents are the results of numerous copying processes, so that a definitive determination cannot be made.  I don't think this is a strong argument, but it's worth considering.

The third best possible argument is based in content.  If the CBS documents were TANG records showing that the Shrub was really a trisexual mutant from one of the shabbier spirals of our galaxy, it would be easier to dismiss them as forgeries.  In this case, the content contributes only marginally to what is pretty clearly already established about the Shrub's military history.

I've worked on a number of projects in which I had to get reports to print in very precise formats and on preprinted forms.  It used to be pretty difficult, but it's very easy now.

I'm not convinced either way.  I suspect that more will be revealed in the next few days.

I also don't care all that much, except to know, if it is a forgery, who did it?

Well, there are those who claim he was the only Officer around, so where did the reports come from?

I've never known a Engineman, or a Gunnersmate, etc. to be able to submit any kind of paperwork for an award, so the reports must have come from Kerry, submitted to someone else higher up... I guess they took his word for what happened.

For shortwave reception I have a T2FD (tilted, terminated folded dipole) and a 400 foot end-fed wire. The two go into a phaser/matcher box before being distributed to the 5 receivers.

Other antennas include a bicone for V/UHF, a colinear for V/UHF ham use, and a full-size vertical dipole on a CB that almost never gets use.

I love the usual FOX news "there are those who claim..."  Claims don't mean snot, okay?

Where's the PROOF that Kerry submitted the after action report?

Wrong.  The above isn't PROOF.  Look it up.

I guess that we're all being expected to take YOUR word for what happened, which you're basing on someone else's WORD for what happened.

Proof, man.  Proof????

Which Line Items are Marked "Shhh...Secret"?

How much of the Defense Department's budget is slated for secret stuff?

Analysts who have looked closely at the spending plan suggest it's just over $26 billion -- or 18 percent of the total.

The Center for Strategic and Budgetary Assessments reports that, when adjusted for inflation, the Fiscal Year 2005 budget includes more classified spending than any other defense budget since 1988.

By their analysis, classified funding has nearly doubled in real terms since 1995.

That's good. I want them spending more, and more on tracking down assholes.

If you're a Liberal, just send in more, and stop bitching.

Kerry?

You're not getting this, are you?  There have been claims made against the validity of Kerry's war record, a record that is the OFFICIAL record of John Kerry.  It's not up to me or Kerry or anyone else to prove that those claims aren't true.  It's up to the accusers to PROVE THEIR CLAIMS.  That's the way it works in the real world.

Now, politically, there's a case to be made that a bunch of lying malcontents who have repeatedly issued contradictory statements and proven lies can introduce enough DOUBT to harm Kerry's chances for election against a known Deserter like Bush.

But that's not PROOF.

Proof is where you prove beyond a reasonable doubt that Kerry wrote falsified accounts of his actions and those falsified accounts led to his awards.

That you do not have.

See the above.  Kerry doesn't have to prove a damned thing.
